Welcome to the Spring 2016 edition of Inspicio. This issue features content about the Miami art scene, interviews with renowned journalists and authors, and an exploration of critical arts activities outside of the university. The edition is one part of the new Inspicio’s arts publication platform sponsored by Florida International University’s College of Architecture + The Arts (CARTA).

Editor’s Letter

In this issue Jens Robinson examines the dynamic life of his father Jerry Robinson, one of the primary drivers in gaining recognition for the artistic quality of the best cartoonists. In 1950, father Jerry Robinson, created several newspaper cartoon features, giving birth to a cartoon art go from zero to over $1 million in his lifetime. As a professional writer, Robinson was elected to the Comic Book Hall of Fame, and even wrote a comic book opera. Robinson served as president of the National Cartoonist Society, created several newspaper cartoon features, and gave birth to a cartoon art go from zero to over $1 million in his lifetime.

The New Yorker

One of the recurring themes of Inspicio is focused on the importance of arts activities outside of the university. The New Yorker has continuously publish content about all arts in Miami.

Daring: My Passages

Finally, another recurring theme in Inspicio is an exploration of the rich tapestry of arts activities outside of the university. The New Yorker has continuously publish content about all arts in Miami.

Daring: My Passages

Finally, another recurring theme in Inspicio is an exploration of the rich tapestry of arts activities outside of the university. The New Yorker has continuously publish content about all arts in Miami.

The Superhero: The Golden Age of Comic Books 1938-1950

We caught up with Gail at the Miami Book Fair, where she was talking about her latest book, Daring: My Passages. As a journalist, Sheehy is best known for articles published in Vanity Fair. She played a part in the history of the New York Times and frequently covered political figures such as Mikhail Gorbachev, Margaret Thatcher, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, and Soviet president Mikhail Gorbachev. While on the subject of journalism, we are thrilled to publish our video interview with Gail Sheehy, a journalistic icon. Sheehy is the author of seventeen books, including the influential books of our times. She has written biographies and character studies of major twentieth-century leaders, including the late President Ronald Reagan, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin. Sheehy is currently offered as a website resource for a global audience interested in the Miami / South Florida art scene.

Daring: My Passages

Finally, another recurring theme in Inspicio is an exploration of the rich tapestry of arts activities outside of the university. The New Yorker has continuously publish content about all arts in Miami.

The Superhero: The Golden Age of Comic Books 1938-1950

We caught up with Gail at the Miami Book Fair, where she was talking about her latest book, Daring: My Passages. As a journalist, Sheehy is best known for articles published in Vanity Fair. She played a part in the history of the New York Times and frequently covered political figures such as Mikhail Gorbachev, Margaret Thatcher, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, and Soviet president Mikhail Gorbachev. While on the subject of journalism, we are thrilled to publish our video interview with Gail Sheehy, a journalistic icon. Sheehy is the author of seventeen books, including the influential books of our times. She has written biographies and character studies of major twentieth-century leaders, including the late President Ronald Reagan, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin. Sheehy is currently offered as a website resource for a global audience interested in the Miami / South Florida art scene.