Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.fiu.edu/student_newspaper

Recommended Citation
http://digitalcommons.fiu.edu/student_newspaper/888

This work is brought to you for free and open access by the Special Collections and University Archives at FIU Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Panther Press (formerly The Beacon) by an authorized administrator of FIU Digital Commons. For more information, please contact dcc@fiu.edu.
RECENT REFLECTIONS

University administration, students discuss recent violence

STEPHANIE ESPAILLAT

News Director
stephanie.espaillat@fiusm.com

The FIU community came together to reflect on the escalation of tragedies and police brutality taking place around the world. FIU gathered to reflect on the significant horrors taking place in Turkey and Bangladesh, and also the systemic issues concerning police brutality and violence here in the United States.

Invited speaker, Nykeeema Radway, president of the Black Student Union at FIU said "It feels like I have been in this place before. In a place of grief, anger, a lot of confusion, and pain."

Radway told the audience who gathered in GC 140 on Friday, July 8, that she and many others in the community have been mourning the deaths of many victims in the past few days and in the last few years.

“A year ago, we were mourning the deaths from the Charleston shooting, the murder of Sandra Bland, and a young Black boy, Mike Brown, who lied in the streets in Ferguson [for] over four hours after being gunned down,” said Radway. “By who? Yes, it was an individual person, but it was a system. A system of violence which was preceded by the decades of the Jim Crow laws and the centuries of the institution of slavery.”

Radway mentioned that even though the recent tragedies impact her and the Black community at FIU, many of us can unite in our struggles to create change.

“This [is the] history of the African descendants in the nation, but this rhetoric is the same for places impacted by imperialism and European colonialism,” said Radway. “Orlando, Baton Rouge, Minnesota, Dallas, Turkey and Bangladesh is a collective struggle that calls for many solutions.”

Radway asked the FIU community to take time to recognize those issues and to heal. She asked that the community process their emotions before taking immediate action.

“If you need to cry before standing, then do so. Or if you need to cry while standing, then feel free to do that, too,” said Radway. “This is not a battle between us or them. We as a people of color fight for the liberation of all the oppressed folks. It will be the task of allies to stand up.”

Radway also encouraged allies to join the conversation and take part in creating change within our communities.

“You do not need to be Black to promote

---

BISCAYNE BAY

Students speak with police

CAYLA BUSH

Editor in Chief
cayla.bush@fiusm.com

If Batman were real, 11 year old Janelle Prophete would like him to stop the police from killing black people.

“I know it’s not happening in Florida, but the police who are killing black people for no reason, if he could, I would like him to fix that,” Prophete said. “If the Avengers were real, I think probably he would’ve fixed that a long time ago.”

Prophete’s statements mirrored those of her sixth to 10th grade peers at the youth dialogues facilitated by communication arts professor, Antoine Hardy at the Biscayne Bay Campus on Monday, July 11.

Having conversations with police and the communities they serve is a good place to start in improving police relations, according to Hardy, who began facilitating dialogues between Miami Dade County Police and community students in 2015. The dialogues, he says, were created in an effort to spark conversation and open the floor to questions, specifically to students.

“Getting it out on the table is a good place to start,” said Hardy. “We’re doing these dialogues, of course we have ambitions and goals like helping communities and people to feel safe, but we also want people’s voices to be heard.”

According to Miami Dade County’s Office of Economic & Demographic Research, close to 5,000 juvenile delinquency complaints were filed between 2013 and 2014. Reaching students during the ages where they’re most susceptible to police interaction is an important part of the dialogues.

Hardy worked alongside Taisha Gauthier, director of the Haitian Mentoring Program and FIU student, to facilitate a dialogue between Haitian-American youth and Miami Dade community resource officers in the Hubert Library. Students in the community were given the opportunity to ask the officers questions in a relaxed setting, and get a better understanding of police protocol.

“Our community members are pretty afraid of the police, and I don’t think law enforcement was originally supposed to have that effect on people. I think that they are here to protect and serve, but they also need to be held accountable. If it’s not happening in Florida, but the police who are killing black people for no reason, if he could, I would like him to fix that.”

---

BSU holds candlelit vigil for victims

SHENNEL SANYAOLU

Contributing Writer
news@fiusm.com

At FIU, our diversity is our strength, according to Larry Lunsford, vice president of Student Affairs. These words were sent in a mass email to the student body following Wednesday’s vigil hosted by Black Student Union. The vigil began with a gospel song by Kirk Franklin, echoing through the candlelit pit in the Graham Center. Students and faculty gathered around the Pit, where they engaged in a forum-style discussion and mourned with the nation the death of Alton Sterling.

Alton Sterling, a 37-year-old black male, was shot dead after an altercation with two police officers outside of Triple S Food Mart in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, early Tuesday morning. With permission from the store owner, Sterling was selling CDs outside of the convenience store where the altercation and subsequent shooting were recorded. The video went viral.

The two police officers are currently on paid administrative leave as the investigation, conducted by the U.S. Department of Justice, continues.

At the vigil, students and faculty members expressed their feelings of frustration and hopelessness.

Associate director of Multicultural Programs and Services, Janice Spann-Givens, reacted to the incident saying “For me it’s a lot of disappointment in our society. We don’t recognize that there is a problem. When something happens once, we can say it’s a coincidence; when something happens twice ... OK, but when something’s happening on a recurring basis, the same
BSU remembers recent victims of police brutality

Professor brings together police, community for dialogue

Feds nearing a decision on whether pot has medical potential

In legal parlance, pot is a Schedule 1 drug, with a high potential for abuse and no medical purpose. However, the law might soon change, as the Obama administration prepares to make what could be its biggest decision yet on marijuana.

Suspense is mounting after the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration missed its self-imposed deadline to decide whether to reschedule the drug and recognize its potential therapeutic value. Twenty-six states already have legalized its medical use.

Dallas shootings might stall efforts to demilitarize police

Criminal justice experts said Friday that the deadly ambush in Dallas could undo two years of precarious progress toward demilitarizing police since the protests and riots in Ferguson, Mo.

The conflicting trends of community policing and the militarization of law enforcement have coexisted in a delicate balance since the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

Those attacks led law enforcement agencies to focus on protecting people against rare but catastrophic events, while the Ferguson unrest of August 2014 prompted a call to return to beat-based policing focused more on relationships than on heavy-duty equipment.

Florida’s algae problem stems from decades of Lake pollution

The algae fouling South Florida beaches traces its origin to cattle ranches, farms and neighborhoods as far north as Orlando.

A vast area drains into Lake Okeechobee, where water laden with phosphorus has fertilized the growth of horrific algae blooms that have been discharged to the ocean. The target phosphorus level for the lake is 105 metric tons a year. Last year, the lake received 450.

The problem has been building up over decades, and defies easy solutions.

Community gathers together to overcome recent tragedies

Role playing activities also highlighted the situations officers might face, to provide students with an understanding of what it’s like to be a police officer.

“The dialogues are an awesome tool because it gives the public the opportunity to talk to police officers one on one, and get our input. For us to reply with any resources they would like to know,” said officer Stracy Devero.

According to Hardy, this mutual understanding of officers and the communities they serve is the biggest benefit of holding the dialogues.

“A lot of times, both the officers and the students will tell me ‘I know a lot more now’ at the end of the dialogues,” Hardy said. “It opens the floor to new ideas, which may lead to some solutions for the issues we’re facing today.”

The vigil concluded with students holding hands in a circle praying for a resolution.

POlice, PAGE 1

to protect and serve us, and we need to feel that way,” said Gauthier. “In order to create that type of setting, we need to create dialogue so that police officers can understand the concerns of the community and address them, and the community can address concerns of the police officers, which are sometimes valid.”

Throughout the dialogues, students asked about bullet proof vests, the reasons for police tactics such as shooting for the chest when using deadly force, and how to de-escalate a typical traffic stop.

“I feel like this conversation helped me understand more about police,” said Prophete. “There was a lot that the student body, FIU’s commitment to fostering understanding and open dialogue about racism among our students and the community as a whole.”

Amber Clark, a recreational therapist major, says “FIU students can be more active by attending events like this [and] speaking up … We are here to let you know that we care, that we’re here. We are part of this country.”

The vigil concluded with students holding hands in a circle praying for a resolution.

Change or to encourage change in the Black community. Encourage people to take action in a positive way,” said Radway. “Know that it is Ok to be angry and hurt. Rooting that pain in humanity allows us to build a better tomorrow. Please do not lose hope.”

FIU President Mark B. Rosenberg also reminded students that the FIU family are in times like these because the community cares about how recent events affect everyone. He also spoke about students and their potential to make lasting changes in our community.

“You all have the potential to lead by example, and in moments like this, we have an opportunity to recommit to that. Let’s mourn the losses, but use the memory of the pain of those losses to build a more just and equitable society,” said Rosenberg.

“We can’t stand on the sidelines, because we are losing the stability that guarantees the harmony and the community that is so critical to maintain this democracy.”

Cheryl Nowell, assistant vice president of Student Affairs and director of Counseling and Psychological Services said, “We come together today as a university to strengthen the ties that bind us together and to strengthen our resolve. To be reminded that who we are matters in this world and that what we do day in and day out, makes a difference.”

Nowell also mentioned that the University provides many services for students who are grieving and are in need of assistance. She said that the staff and the offices at the university are open to everyone to provide a safe space. In addition, there are cultural programs and services, counseling and victim empowerment services, and the women’s center that are available to students if needed.

“We cannot be angry. I am disappointed that we are moving [to] a place that’s not good for any of us. I am angry. I am hurt. I am disappointed that we are moving [to] a place that’s not good for any of us,” said Prophete.

“Givens also said that students should not be complicit because situations aren’t as bad as they may have been generations ago.

“Racism is alive, even here at the University,” Givens said. “Take it from conversation to: what can we do this?”

This shooting follows a string of police shootings, involving young Black males around the country that has attracted national news attention.

The vice president for Student Affairs said Hardy, “It opens the floor to new ideas, which may lead to some solutions for the issues we’re facing today.”

Criminal justice experts said Friday that the deadly ambush in Dallas could undo two years of precarious progress toward demilitarizing police since the protests and riots in Ferguson, Mo.

Those attacks led law enforcement agencies to focus on protecting people against rare but catastrophic events, while the Ferguson unrest of August 2014 prompted a call to return to beat-based policing focused more on relationships than on heavy-duty equipment.

The algae fouling South Florida beaches traces its origin to cattle ranches, farms and neighborhoods as far north as Orlando.

A vast area drains into Lake Okeechobee, where water laden with phosphorus has fertilized the growth of horrific algae blooms that have been discharged to the ocean. The target phosphorus level for the lake is 105 metric tons a year. Last year, the lake received 450.

The problem has been building up over decades, and defies easy solutions.
Hinduism seeks answers in wake of a tragedy

POLITICIZED

Hoolies ABB gun mistaken for a real gun. A severely spine gone wrong. A man who couldn't catch his breath.

Now, the sound of music has been silenced permanently. Alton Sterling, a 37-year-old man was shot down by July 5 by two police officers at the Triple S Food Mart in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. The incident was caught on video.

Police received a distressed call from someone at the convenience store earlier, saying, “a Black male who was selling music [CDs] and wearing a red shirt that was shot.” It was confirmed according to gun.

The store owner, Abdullah Mufahil, saw the altercation go down, before he stepped up two feet away from the scene. The two officers, identified by CNN as Marlin Brown and Lake II, pinned Sterling down, and “fired four to six shots into Sterling’s chest,” said Mufahil to the所所 divisions.

He also said that even though Sterling was carrying a weapon while he was pinned down, “his hand was nowhere near his pocket.” He did not attempt to hurt those police officers. Mufahil added “that they were really aggressive with him from the start,” to thetheadvocate.com.

The officers have been placed on administrative leave and the U.S. attorney’s office in Baton Rouge, the FBI and State Police also will be involved in the investigation. Louisiana Governor John Bel Edwards to CNN.

This outrageous event has caused protests to erupt nationwide. This is the “505th fatal police shooting by an on-duty police officer,” according to the Washington Post to track shootings by law enforcement. The Black Lives Matter movement grows stronger now that this incident has occurred and makes us have grown restless with anger and outcry. It seems that the carelessness with which black lives are treated is becoming more evident, more and more of these events surface. Even as there are changes that have occurred within the police department, like having to carry body cameras, that has not stopped the violence or the countless lives that have been lost following these events.

The changes have made violence and ending violence and hate crimes.

As a criminal justice minor, I’ve learned that in law enforcement, profiling is a necessary tactic. The method is meant to be used to describe characteristics of a person’s appearance or behavior in order to catch a suspect. However, racially profiling an individual to them arrest, shoot, or tackle them to the ground on a basis, is unacceptable. Perhaps training officers on new tactics for handling suspicious situations before they decide to pull the trigger could make all the difference.

FIU held a discussion on July 8, Reflections on Recent Tragic Events, to talk about how we can support each other.

The events that have occurred around our nation and the world only serve to strengthen our resolve to embrace this diversity and work to preserve how that diversity manifests and expresses itself.

While speaking to FIU Student Media, Chief Casas said he hopes people will “see” and take away from all these tragic events, is the energy to revitalize our society to move forward and make changes together.

As a criminal justice minor, I’ve learned that in law enforcement, profiling is a necessary tactic. The method is meant to be used to describe characteristics of a person’s appearance or behavior in order to catch a suspect. However, racially profiling an individual to them arrest, shoot, or tackle them to the ground on a basis, is unacceptable. Perhaps training officers on new tactics for handling suspicious situations before they decide to pull the trigger could make all the difference.

FIU held a discussion on July 8, Reflections on Recent Tragic Events, to talk about how we can support each other.

The events that have occurred around our nation and the world only serve to strengthen our resolve to embrace this diversity and work to preserve how that diversity manifests and expresses itself.

While speaking to FIU Student Media, Chief Casas said he hopes people will “see” and take away from all these tragic events, is the energy to revitalize our society to move forward and make changes together.

As a criminal justice minor, I’ve learned that in law enforcement, profiling is a necessary tactic. The method is meant to be used to describe characteristics of a person’s appearance or behavior in order to catch a suspect. However, racially profiling an individual to them arrest, shoot, or tackle them to the ground on a basis, is unacceptable. Perhaps training officers on new tactics for handling suspicious situations before they decide to pull the trigger could make all the difference.

FIU held a discussion on July 8, Reflections on Recent Tragic Events, to talk about how we can support each other.

The events that have occurred around our nation and the world only serve to strengthen our resolve to embrace this diversity and work to preserve how that diversity manifests and expresses itself.
President Obama discusses police brutality

With cell phone recordings and social media, the recent tragedies involving police officers who were targeting African Americans seem to be showing up more frequently than in previous years.

President Obama released a statement on July 8, where he addressed the police shootings and provided some staggering statistics. Among the list of statistics he shared, the president mentioned that African Americans and Hispanics are more likely to be searched after being pulled over.

When discussing the incarceration percentages, Obama mentioned that African American defendants are 57 percent more likely to be charged with offenses carrying mandatory minimums, as well as receiving sentences that are 10 percent longer than those given to Whites committing the same crime.

It is possible that after all these years with slavery abolished and the Civil Rights Movement, African American citizens are still being treated poorly.

The New York Times, which published the press conference held President Obama, also included that the Hispanic and African American community being only 30 percent of the United States population, occupy more than 50 percent of jails all over the nation.

Several activist groups have decided to take a stand and fight for the rights of those affected by the recent events, not only for African Americans, but also the families of the victims who have regrettably passed away due to the violence that has taken place in the past few days.

These conclusions like Jennifer Lopez, Lin-Manuel Miranda, Weezer and Christina Aguilera also have released new songs in order to raise funds and support the families who are currently grieving for their loved ones.

Why is it that during times of violence, everyone is willing to help, but yet no one stands up to fight the root of the problem? Spur of the moment actions only provide temporary solutions.

It’s time to realize that our actions, or inaction, is going to lead us down a destructive path, unless we stop and make a change.

Every couple of years, there are songs and movies that promote change and peace in the world but it is finally going to take someone up or someone putting a couple more decades to realize that it’s too late?

Linda Rios is a contributing writer for FIU Student Media. Her column, Rivers of Truth, is a commentary on pop culture current events. For suggestions or comments, please contact Linda at opinion@fiusm.com.
POCKET MONSTERS ON CAMPUS

Students and strangers gather to catch them all

Clockwise: FIU senior students Ana Briz, Art History major, Omar Morillo, English major, and Adin Greenstein, Liberal Science major, playing Pokémon Go! on Satur-day evening with a group of individuals that came to campus to catch pokémon.

There are currently five gyms on campus, their levels are as shown as of June 11.

The most popular poké stops on campus are generally around the Graham Center and Frost Museum.

Pokemon Go application takes over FIU

The Pokémon Company, in association with Nintendo and Niantic Labs, recently released the application Pokémon Go in the United States. The app features the Japanese-created pocket monsters in a new gaming experience for its fans.

“Travel between the real world and the virtual world of Pokémon with Pokémon GO for iPhone and Android devices,” as the Pokémon Company website says, in their article reporting on the game’s features and release dates.

The objective of this game is to explore your neighborhood and surrounding areas in order to track down virtual creatures and, as the Pokémon, add them to your pokedex. The ultimate goal is to “catch ’em all,” as the catchphrase of the popular TV show states.

Pokémon GO is built on Niantic’s Real World Gaming Platform and will use real locations to encourage players to search far and wide in the real world to discover Pokémon. The Pokémon Company on their site, “Pokémon GO allows you to find and catch more than a hundred species of Pokémon as you explore your surroundings.”

The popularity of this application has spread to the FIU community in large numbers. Within the past few days, FIU has been the hangout spot for gamers, both FIU students and non-students. People come from all around just for a chance to catch a pokémon.

Omar Morillo, a senior studying English, says, “I play partly for nostalgia and partly because it’s a fun bonding experience. There has been a surprisingly large amount of community building over this game and seeing people go and walk around at all hours is really cool.”

“I must have made 20 new friends since playing this game,” says Adin Greenstein, a senior studying liberal science. “[We were] crowded around in the uncut grass before GC, just so everyone can catch the Pikachu someone found there. That was when it hit me: we, those of us playing this game, spending countless hours walking out in the sun, have been given a gift we never really thought we would.”

Sunday, July 10, an estimated 200 individuals walked together through the Green Library in hopes of finding a “Squirtle,” during the night. The video posted by Twitter user @lynchetaa has gone viral with over 3,000 retweets overnight.

“I just love how suddenly everyone found this one and they’re all over it. This game is literally everywhere,” Morillo said. “Especially on campus. There are a lot of moments where I’ll see people playing and we’ll all just coyly smile to each other because we know. I play basically every day.”

Ana Briz, an art history senior, expresses concern albeit enjoying the game.

“It gets people outside and new experiences along the way.”

“Pokémon GO’s success adds $7.5 billion to Nintendo’s market value.”

The Pokémon Company believes the app has been at a high point since its release and will only continue growing with new features to be released in the near future. The fans are the ones who will continue fueling the so-called “Pokémon Fever.”

“In the realest sense of the term, we’re all actually partaking of the magical quest that some part of our brains refused to stop believing in. For anyone who plays the game, brow covered in sweat and smile almost painfully large, this realization brings almost tears to our eyes. In the past four days I’ve walked nearly five kilometers I would otherwise not have walked. It also encourages social interaction.”

Other than the benefits to the consumers, Nintendo’s stocks have benefited enormously from the game’s release. In an article for The Verge, James Vincent headlines “Pokémon GO’s success adds $7.5 billion to Nintendo’s market value.”

The popularity of this application has spread to the FIU community in large numbers. Within the past few days, FIU has been the hangout spot for gamers, both FIU students and non-students. People come from all around just for a chance to catch a pokémon.

Pokémon GO application takes over FIU

NADINE MATAS
Entertainment Director
nadine.matas@fiusm.com

The Pokémon Company, in association with Nintendo and Niantic Labs, recently released the application Pokémon Go in the United States. The app features the Japanese-created pocket monsters in a new gaming experience for its fans.

“Travel between the real world and the virtual world of Pokémon with Pokémon GO for iPhone and Android devices,” as the Pokémon Company website says, in their article reporting on the game’s features and release dates.

The objective of this game is to explore your neighborhood and surrounding areas in order to track down virtual creatures and, as the Pokémon, add them to your pokedex. The ultimate goal is to “catch ’em all,” as the catchphrase of the popular TV show states.

Pokémon GO is built on Niantic’s Real World Gaming Platform and will use real locations to encourage players to search far and wide in the real world to discover Pokémon. The Pokémon Company on their site, “Pokémon GO allows you to find and catch more than a hundred species of Pokémon as you explore your surroundings.”

The popularity of this application has spread to the FIU community in large numbers. Within the past few days, FIU has been the hangout spot for gamers, both FIU students and non-students. People come from all around just for a chance to catch a pokémon.

Omar Morillo, a senior studying English, says, “I play partly for nostalgia and partly because it’s a fun bonding experience. There has been a surprisingly large amount of community building over this game and seeing people go and walk around at all hours is really cool.”

“I must have made 20 new friends since playing this game,” says Adin Greenstein, a senior studying liberal science. “[We were] crowded around in the uncut grass before GC, just so everyone can catch the Pikachu someone found there. That was when it hit me: we, those of us playing this game, spending countless hours walking out in the sun, have been given a gift we never really thought we would.”

Sunday, July 10, an estimated 200 individuals walked together through the Green Library in hopes of finding a “Squirtle,” during the night. The video posted by Twitter user @lynchetaa has gone viral with over 3,000 retweets overnight.

“I just love how suddenly everyone found this one and they’re all over it. This game is literally everywhere,” Morillo said. “Especially on campus. There are a lot of moments where I’ll see people playing and we’ll all just coyly smile to each other because we know. I play basically every day.”

Ana Briz, an art history senior, expresses concern albeit enjoying the game.

“It gets people outside and new experiences along the way.”

“Pokémon GO’s success adds $7.5 billion to Nintendo’s market value.”

The Pokémon Company believes the app has been at a high point since its release and will only continue growing with new features to be released in the near future. The fans are the ones who will continue fueling the so-called “Pokémon Fever.”

“In the realest sense of the term, we’re all actually partaking of the magical quest that some part of our brains refused to stop believing in. For anyone who plays the game, brow covered in sweat and smile almost painfully large, this realization brings almost tears to our eyes. In the past four days I’ve walked nearly five kilometers I would otherwise not have walked. It also encourages social interaction.”

Other than the benefits to the consumers, Nintendo’s stocks have benefited enormously from the game’s release. In an article for The Verge, James Vincent headlines “Pokémon GO’s success adds $7.5 billion to Nintendo’s market value.”

The Pokémon Company believes the app has been at a high point since its release and will only continue growing with new features to be released in the near future. The fans are the ones who will continue fueling the so-called “Pokémon Fever.”

“In the realest sense of the term, we’re all actually partaking of the magical quest that some part of our brains refused to stop believing in. For anyone who plays the game, brow covered in sweat and smile almost painfully large, this realization brings almost incomparable joy.” Greenstein says. “We’re here on a quest, walking towards the horizon for greater finds, playfully battling to become stronger, and making new friends and new experiences along the way.”

Visit fiusm.com for the full story.
Aubry’s 64 days abroad: Vienna Edition

There was once a four year old girl whose mother was up one night watching the 1984 film Amadeus. This time this little girl heard opera and was conscious of its beauty, and so there was nothing else to do than walk out, lie about a foxus nightmare that kept her up, and beg to become a show. This little girl was, and since that day I have longed to visit Vienna, famously named the City of Music, see a live opera.

How fortunate that I should visit during a national holiday when Antonio Vivaldi’s Don Carlo would be showing the day after learning the cheapest way to get tickets. It was a beautiful performance, inspiring chills, tears, and many “bravos” from the audience.

A city isn’t very efficient if it is difficult to navigate, but even for someone with no sense of direction and without the aid of GPS. Vienna is not a terribly difficult city to understand. Vienna’s metro system is relatively cheap and simple to comprehend; for students and children, there is a five day pass available for $17.31 that can take you from the airport to the city.

The metro works on an honor system; no one routinely checks tickets. Cons, short for students, “Do you have a pass?” getup of what is more weird than being found without one. They rent out bicycles, umbrellas, and many more supplies, in addition to offering walking tours and day trips to sight-see. For an additional fee, breakfast is buffet style with little selection, but all of the choices are very healthy, light, and tasty. There is a bar on the main floor, laundry facilities with free soap downstairs, and comfortable rooms in the floors above, with windows that open to a beautiful view.

Food is the best part of visiting a new place; in Vienna, beef and potatoes are generally your most common meals, Gino Keller, a traditional Viennese restaurant, has the best boiled beef I have ever tried. Schnitzel and apfelstrudel are necessary dishes, and while the schnitzel is good nearly anywhere, the apfelstrudel is the best at the Café Museum.

Culture shock isn’t a big problem here, because apart from the food and architecture (and bike lanes), nearly everything else is similar. Familiar department stores like H&M and Zara are on every block. American music is played nearly everywhere and there are few people who don’t speak English. Less English is spoken in Miami.

It was strange to be in a foreign country on a different continent and still feel so close to the U.S. The only aspect of Vienna that came as a shock was the lack of use of credit or debit cards. I applied for my first one before this trip to avoid the worry of carrying large amounts of cash around, only to find out that many places accept only cash.

Generally, the people here are lovely and were quick to help us when they saw lost tourists crowded over a map. Vienna is a city rich with culture; interesting food, and great sights to see.

Supercon ‘creates community’

Comic conventions always create a sense of community; the unique and close atmosphere of geek culture is something that few things in this world can match. July kicked off with not only Independence Day weekend excitement, but also the Florida Supercon, where people came dressed in their respective fan communities — from Game of Thrones to Star Wars.

Walking in felt almost normal, despite the fact that there was a guy in an incredibly elaborate “Do It Yourself” getup of what could only be considered as a retro Transformer robot. Somewhere else in the entrance hall was someone dressed head to toe in a Nick Wilde furry costume from “Zootopia”, which may be the most ghastly thing to exist since bolo ties. And yet with all of this, it still felt inviting and positively fun.

It’s not unusual to see celebrity guests in attendance at panels, meet fans and sign pictures and merchandise Cos, short for conventions, even usually feature them.

This year’s Supercon guest list was extensive: three leads from this year’s “Deadpool”: Morena Baccarin, also on FOX’s “Gotham”, Brianna Hildebrand as the Negasonic Teenage Warhead, and Stefan Kapicic as Colossus.

Other guests included Cummings’ co-star and lead on “Gotham” Ben McKenzie, William Shatner, and famous voice actresses Tara Strong and Paige O’Hara.

Another voice actor who was available for fan meetings was Jim Cummings, whose work in voicing animated characters is renowned. His most famous work has been in Walt Disney Animation for beloved characters such as Winnie the Pooh and Tigger, and for the obscure but still as widely admired, Darkwing Duck.

“Is it interesting to see what really touches people,” said Cummings in an interview with FIU Student Media. He recalled his first convention where fans had unexpectedly asked him to recall a line from the 1998 video game, “Baldur’s Gate”. Instead of his more iconic roles, “They grew up on all my crazy cartoons and voices.”

Cummings also talked about the culture that resonates in these conventions. “The admiration and love for a movie, television show, or any media, comes to a sort of nexus here.”

People dress up in simple or elaborate costumes because this is the place to do it, it’s an environment where people understand it. Anywhere else, it might seem weird to dress like a fox from a Disney movie, but at Supercon, it’s not any more weird than being clad in black and carrying around a crossguard lightsaber.

Comic Con goers love these characters and the actors who brought them to life. Though people may not have been familiar with Cummings and his work, they still came because of the legacy he has and that’s something that is valued and love at these conventions.

After speaking with the man behind Winnie the Pooh, it really is interesting to see people. That is what made Supercon a great experience.

Unity is defined as the state of being united or joined as a whole. The Rally 100 Kick Off to Homecoming event, taking place Wednesday, July 13 at the FIU Housing Quad from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., was created as a way to bring FIU students together to start the official countdown to Homecoming. According to the organizers, this year’s Rally 100 is going to be quite different from previous years.

“It used to be 100 days long and would take place in the pit,” explained Sammy Hadi, assistant director of operations for the Homecoming council. However, this year Hadi wanted to shake things up.

Unlike past Rally 100 events, this year’s event, free for all FIU students, will bring together all clubs and organizations on campus.

“When I got the position of assistant director, I wanted to have an open door policy with all of the other organizations,” said Hadi. He began thinking of ways to bring all of these different organizations together and thus, this year’s Rally 100 was born.

Mentors will be able to participate in games, giveaways, take pictures with the fire engines, enjoy cotton candy, and watch performances by FIU’s Dazzlers and Karizma.

There will also be special guest appearances from DJ Hercules of 99 Jamz, and our very own President Rosenberg.

The Rally 100 event will lead into the Splash 50. The Splash 50 is a pool party in the Housing Quad, on August 26, from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m., to mark the 50 days before the Homecoming game.

There will be appearances by a guest DJ as well as giveaways and special contests every hour.

“The Homecoming is the fabric of FIU,” said Hadi. “Once a year, we come together and share our pride for our university. You can come from any major or background and this brings us together.”

Off to Homecoming Wednesday, July 13 at the Beacon
Wellness and Recreation Center offers free tennis lessons for students

Alexa Roth Contributing Writer

The Wellness and Recreation Center at FIU’s Biscayne Bay Campus is offering free tennis instruction to students from beginner to advanced levels. Instructor Tom Fowkes, has been teaching tennis for almost 15 years, with 10 years working full time.

Fowkes teaches kids and adults in addition to FIU students. He instructs a student who has won four national championships, and has coached other tournament players, too.

Fowkes decided to teach at FIU because “It gives him a chance to teach his program, and work with college students.” He says he has formed many relationships with the students that attend the program and the faculty and staff at FIU. Fowkes accommodates those on different levels and says “keeping everyone interested is the main idea, and I keep the instruction informative and light so that way everyone can get something out of it.”

“As a student, it’s great that it’s offered to us for free, and what I enjoy the most is [the instructor’s] personality,” William Sturrup, a participant in Fowkes’ program, said. “He is a nurturing, attentive, and motivates students to come out and do their best.”

Fowkes is grateful to have formed such a strong relationship with the faculty and staff at the FIU Wellness and Recreation center, particularly with Director Elias Barduvill and Assistant Director Warren Shaw. The tennis program will take place every Thursday from 6-7 p.m. at the Biscayne Bay Campus and will last until July 28.

A student of the BBC Wellness and Recreation Center’s tennis class takes a shot at returning a serve during class.

Melendez ‘takes great honor’ in leading team

Alejandro Solana Staff Writer

New FIU baseball coach Mervyl Melendez said at his press conference that FIU has always been on his radar since he began coaching at the collegiate level. The ex-Alabama State University head coach made it clear that his intention was to “find a new home.”

Melendez said: “This journey started for me many years ago. 20 years ago I became a baseball coach, thinking that one day I would be here. This is one of the few jobs that I looked at as one day could be mine. One day I could be there. One day I can call FIU home. And the day has arrived.”

The day has indeed arrived, but the journey was no quick one. The 42-year-old was born in Carolina, Puerto Rico, the same birthplace of baseball legend and hall of famer, Roberto Clemente. At the age of 13, Melendez moved to Orlando, Florida, where he attended Lake Howell High School in Winter Park.

The Puerto Rican native spent his playing days at Bethune Cookman, prior to becoming the assistant coach and ultimately the head coach of that program. Melendez spent 12 years as the head coach of the Wildcats and posted a 379-319 record.

After his time at Bethune, it was his tenure at Alabama State that really showed Melendez was one of the most respected young coaches in the nation. With a 158-116 record in his five seasons, Melendez became the third-youngest head coach in Division I history to earn his 500th career win.

From the moment Melendez accepted the position as the Panthers’ leading man, he says he understood the responsibility that came with the job.

Melendez said: “For me, I take great honor and I take great pride in leading this program. I have a responsibility I have a responsibility to the administration. I have a responsibility to the alumni. I have a responsibility to our players.”

The players currently on the roster at FIU may have excelled Melendez, but there is no question that the hotbed of talent in the area is what truly lured Melendez to South Florida.

“The excitement comes from the players that are in Miami,” Melendez said. “The talent level here is unlimited.”

Melendez says he “has always recruited in this area.” So it comes to no surprise that he would take a job in the area where he has already established a strong recruiting repertoire.

“This is the area we are going to target first,” Melendez said.

He also mentioned at the press conference that he wants to keep talent close to FIU instead of the University of Miami.

“We have to stay home,” Melendez said. “We have players in this area that need to stay in this area, not on the other side of Miami.”

As confident as FIU fans may be in their new signing, there is no denying that competing with the University of Miami and the established Jim Morris for recruits in South Florida will be no easy task.

You start with the idea that you not only want to be successful, but you want to get to a place that you can call home,” Melendez said.

Hopeful for FIU, Melendez and his family will be calling South Florida home for a while.

FOOTBALL

TV deal can put FIU on the map

Badger Buzz Conference USA released its preliminary schedule stating that six out of 12 FIU football games will be televised on CBS Sports, American Sports Network, ESPN+ and beIN Sports. The news was released on June 8.

This deal gives the Conference the attention they have been looking for. Why do I say that? Well, think about how many teams you can name in C-USA without looking on the internet; it may not be very many.

This isn’t just benefiting FIU, but it also brings publicity for the entire conference, especially in this day and age where every huge sporting event is on a flat-screen television.

“I think it’s going to be great for FIU because now they are going to get more media coverage and more exposure because not too many people know about the team,” FIU student Diana Obregon said when asked about the new television deal.

Indeed, the deal will provide more exposure to the Panthers and possibly help elevate the FIU history and tradition.

Not only will this deal stir things up for FIU Football, but it could provide more exposure for other teams in the future like the basketball and baseball teams, who are in the C-USA media as general. This television deal could help draw more interest in recruitments, fans and sports media in general.

The first of the six games will be the season home opener against the Indiana University Hoosiers on Thursday, Sept. 1. The rest of the games being televised are listed below:

Thursday, Sept. 1; Indiana at FIU (ESPN+); 7:30 p.m. ET
Friday, Sept. 9; Maryland at FIU (CBS Sports Network); 7:30 p.m. ET Saturday, Sept. 24; UCF at FIU (beIN SPORTS); 7:00 p.m. ET Saturday, Oct. 1; Florida Atlantic at FIU (beIN SPORTS); 7:00 p.m. ET Saturday, Nov. 5; FIU at WKU (beIN SPORTS); 7:30 p.m. ET
Saturday, Nov. 19; Marshall at FIU (American Sports Network); 7:00 p.m. ET

Badger Buzz is a biweekly column about occurrences in sports at FIU. To contact Samir, email him at samir.bader@fiusm.com.
German transfer learns to adjust after tough transition to U.S.

REINALDO LLERENA
Staff Writer
reinaldo.llerena@fiu.edu

Initially, the adjustment to life in the United States was difficult for Marvin Hezel, defensive player for the FIU men’s soccer team, who grew up in a small town with a different climate.

Born in Waldshut-Tiengen, Germany, Hezel grew up in a family oriented, relaxed community with a small population. He was introduced to soccer at a young age by his parents and often played with friends in his free time. When he was offered a scholarship to play overseas in Miami, he jumped at the opportunity.

“It took about a year or so to get used to the Miami weather,” said Hezel. “It was a big change from Germany. I often practiced in the heat that first year to try and get used to it as fast as possible. Coming from a town that only had 25,000 people to one that has almost half a million is a big change. It felt crowded compared to Waldshut, where you have met or seen just about everyone that lived there.”

It didn’t take long for the soccer player to make a name for himself here in the states.

In 2015, Hezel was named the Conference USA “Defensive Player of the Week” for the week of Sept. 8. He started all 20 games of the Panther season and accumulated a total of six points throughout the season. The points include two goals and two assists from the FIU defender. At the end of the season, Hezel was named to the 2015 All-Southeast region first team, the All-C-USA first team, the C-USA Championship All-Tournament team and the C-USA All-Academic team.

“When I first arrived in the U.S., I spoke a very limited English,” said Hezel. “I was very excited when I was awarded a scholarship to play at FIU, but more excited about a foreign opportunity to play overseas while getting an education.”

Hezel said he would listen to how the people around him spoke English and would research any unfamiliar words at night. He made it his goal to look up at least one word per day during his freshman year to help him learn English. Hezel said his English is almost as good as his German, although he has trouble with the occasional word.

Now entering his senior year, Hezel is focusing on his final season on the team and completing his undergraduate degree in marketing. He is currently interning with FIU’s Sports Marketing department and working our twice a day to get ready for the fall season.

“I love the communication aspect of marketing,” Hezel said. “Learning how to promote a product to a certain consumer is the part I like the most. There’s some psychology at play in marketing that I am fascinated by. It’s an interesting field.”

Horner to coach Botswana in Rio this summer

ALEJANDRO SOLANA
Staff Writer
alejandro.solana@fiu.edu

Randy Horner, FIU’s swimming and diving coach, will be coaching the Botswana Olympic swimming team in the upcoming 2016 Summer Olympic Games in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

“It’s an honor to be selected to coach Naomi and David at the Olympics,” Horner told FIUSports.com.

Horner, who was named the 2016 Conference USA Coach of the Year, guided the Panthers to their second straight C-USA championship this season, defeating second-place Rice by 318 points, the largest margin of victory in C-USA championship history.

Since taking over the program in the 2010-2011 season, the Missouri State grad has found success in recruiting athletes from around the world. Horner has recruited swimmers from over 12 different countries including Iceland, South Africa and Slovenia.

Horner will be coaching sophomore backstroke and freestyle swimmer, Naomi Ruele in Rio, who he recruited back in 2014 while she was still living in her native city of Gaberone, Botswana.

“I spoke to Nacho and Randy and got along with them really well,” said Ruele. “There was a coach/athlete chemistry and I decided to come here.”

Horner will be coaching Ruele this August as she competes in the 50-meter free, as well as David Van Der Colff, a freshman from Nova Southeastern, who will be competing in the 100-meter backstroke.

This summer in Rio will be the first time Horner coaches an Olympic swimming team, but Ruele and Van Der Colff are not the first Olympic swimmers to be coached by Horner Olympians Raichin Anotonov (Bulgaria) and Jackie Wellman (Zambia) were coached by Horner in 2004 during his time as an assistant swimming coach at Missouri State.

He then established a swimming program in New Orleans prior to moving to South Florida and then repeating his success as a coach at FIU with two-consecutive Conference USA championships. Now, Botswana has trusted Horner to lead their swimmers in the Olympic Games.

Despite his international success, Horner plans to stay in South Florida for the next few years. In 2015, the FIU executive director of Sports and Entertainment announced that Horner agreed to a contract extension with FIU which runs through the 2018-19 season.

Christian Garcia, a senior accounting and finance major, is an avid Olympics fan who says he can’t wait to support Ruele and Horner.

“I always watch the Olympics every four years, but there is no doubt I will be tuning in to see Naomi represent FIU,” said Garcia. “I think it is awesome to see athletes from my university represent their home nations. I will be rooting hard for Ruele and Horner.”

Senior Adam Machin, majoring in political science, agrees with Garcia and was shocked when he learned about Ruele representing Botswana.

“I was fascinated to learn about Ruele and her background. I think it is amazing that FIU will be represented by someone from Botswana in an Olympic Game,” Machin said. “It truly does speak to the diversity of our University.”

Horner to coach Botswana in Rio this summer

SPORTS

Three Panthers on All C-USA Team

PETE HOLLAND
Staff Writer
peter.holland@fiu.com

Conference USA has released its preseason All-Conference USA Team on July 20, and three FIU players were selected this year: seniors, Jommi and Michael Montero, and junior, Anthony Wint. These returning starters are expected to be the leaders for this season as they are preparing for training camp beginning in August, knowing that the Panthers are going in as a young team.

“They are always looking up to me,” Smith said. They know they can come to me for any advice.”

Last season, Smith started eight games before going down with a knee injury that kept him out in the last four games. Despite his injury, he lead the team in touchdown passes and finished his junior career with a single-season career high of 36 passes for 397 yards and four touchdowns.

The Ocala, Florida, native was added to the NCAA record books for catching at least one catch in 32 consecutive games. His best game, last season, was in week eight against Old Dominion University, where he tied a career-high 10 catches and a career-best 183 yards, which was fourth most in the University’s history.

FOOTBALL

Three Panthers on All C-USA Team

PETER HOLLAND
Staff Writer
peter.holland@fiu.com

Conference USA has released its preseason All-Conference USA Team on July 20, and three FIU players were selected this year: seniors, Jommi and Michael Montero, and junior, Anthony Wint. These returning starters are expected to be the leaders for this season as they are preparing for training camp beginning in August, knowing that the Panthers are going in as a young team.

“They are always looking up to me,” Smith said. They know they can come to me for any advice.”

Last season, Smith started eight games before going down with a knee injury that kept him out in the last four games. Despite his injury, he lead the team in touchdown passes and finished his junior career with a single-season career high of 36 passes for 397 yards and four touchdowns.

The Ocala, Florida, native was added to the NCAA record books for catching at least one catch in 32 consecutive games. His best game, last season, was in week eight against Old Dominion University, where he tied a career-high 10 catches and a career-best 183 yards, which was fourth most in the University’s history.

FOOTBALL

Three Panthers on All C-USA Team

PETER HOLLAND
Staff Writer
peter.holland@fiu.com

Conference USA has released its preseason All-Conference USA Team on July 20, and three FIU players were selected this year: seniors, Jommi and Michael Montero, and junior, Anthony Wint. These returning starters are expected to be the leaders for this season as they are preparing for training camp beginning in August, knowing that the Panthers are going in as a young team.

“They are always looking up to me,” Smith said. They know they can come to me for any advice.”

Last season, Smith started eight games before going down with a knee injury that kept him out in the last four games. Despite his injury, he lead the team in touchdown passes and finished his junior career with a single-season career high of 36 passes for 397 yards and four touchdowns.

The Ocala, Florida, native was added to the NCAA record books for catching at least one catch in 32 consecutive games. His best game, last season, was in week eight against Old Dominion University, where he tied a career-high 10 catches and a career-best 183 yards, which was fourth most in the University’s history.

FOOTBALL

Three Panthers on All C-USA Team

PETER HOLLAND
Staff Writer
peter.holland@fiu.com

Conference USA has released its preseason All-Conference USA Team on July 20, and three FIU players were selected this year: seniors, Jommi and Michael Montero, and junior, Anthony Wint. These returning starters are expected to be the leaders for this season as they are preparing for training camp beginning in August, knowing that the Panthers are going in as a young team.

“They are always looking up to me,” Smith said. They know they can come to me for any advice.”

Last season, Smith started eight games before going down with a knee injury that kept him out in the last four games. Despite his injury, he lead the team in touchdown passes and finished his junior career with a single-season career high of 36 passes for 397 yards and four touchdowns.

The Ocala, Florida, native was added to the NCAA record books for catching at least one catch in 32 consecutive games. His best game, last season, was in week eight against Old Dominion University, where he tied a career-high 10 catches and a career-best 183 yards, which was fourth most in the University’s history.
Jonnu Smith confident in football team this season

FOOTBALL

PLANK IT OUT

Budokon club brings ‘warrior spirit’ out of students

SPORTS

FOOTBALL

Jonnu Smith confident in football team this season

After a knee injury left him unable to continue the season, Jonnu Smith, a tight end on the FIU football team, feels 100 percent healthy and is looking forward to getting back on the field for this upcoming season. Smith believes this could be a big year for the Panthers.

In his senior year, after finishing one game short of bowl eligibility, the Ocala native is sure that he will leave FIU on a high note now that he is one of the team leaders for this season.

“Just being around the guys and motivating them, I got to put more emphasis on how important it is to improve every day,” Smith said.

On Oct. 24 during the last football season, Smith broke school records, along with his own, for career catches and receiving yardage in a game against Old Dominion University, finishing the game with 10 catches for 183 yards and two touchdowns.

A week later, his 2015 season was cut short after sustaining a knee injury a day before the team faced Florida Atlantic University. He was unable to play for the remainder of the season and the Panthers suffered, losing three out of the final four games. The two-time captain finished the season with four touchdowns, recording 36 catches for 397 yards and starting in eight games.

“I learned that for the most part that when times got tough, we kind of fell apart as a team during some of the losses,” Smith said. “We have to stay together more during the course of adversity because it’s going to strike.”

After months of rehab and recovery, Smith believes that his left knee is stronger than ever and is confident that he can stay healthy throughout the 2016 season. Smith said: “Just like I told everybody, my knee is better than it was once before. I feel faster, stronger and more powerful off that left knee. It feels like I’ve never been injured. I’m just appreciative of the trainer and strength staff for getting me past the point I was before.”

For a second year in a row, Smith has been named to the John Mackey Award Preseason Watch List; this recognition is given annually to the most outstanding collegiate tight end in the nation. He was also voted First Team All-Conference-USA by Athlon Sports Magazine.

Smith is confident that this season FIU is going to witness his best year yet. The senior Panther is also sure that the team will get over the hump, and he’s hopeful that the Panthers will get at least six wins for the first time under Ron Turner and win C-USA.

“You’re going to see the best Jonna Smith you have ever seen since my freshman year,” Smith said. “I’m more experienced, older, wiser, better, faster, stronger, more confident, you know all the above. I’m excited for this year, and I’ll be going out with a bang.”

The Panthers’ first game will take place on Sept. 1 against Indiana University at the FIU Football Stadium at 7:30 p.m.

FIU students get in straight-arm plank at Budokon class.

KRISTEN KING
Contributing Writer

Budokon began as a club and mixed martial arts and started the workout, a mirror the way a warrior leads the class in a quick burst of punches and kicks that could be helpful in to everyday situations.

“I think the benefit of Budokon is the possibility to incorporate lessons we learn while practicing yoga or martial arts to the daily life and therefore practice Budokon everywhere,” Ranasinghe said.

As the class comes to a close, students are again encouraged to meditate to calm and revitalize their bodies after the hour-long workout. Ranasinghe cleans up the studio with a smile on her face.

When asked why they enjoy teaching Budokon, Ranasinghe and Antunes shared a common answer: “To me personally, it is a way to improve my communication skills and to see the yoga practice from a beginner’s point of view,” Antunes said.

Ranasinghe said: “I love how I feel after every class [as a student] and wanted to give back the same experience [as an instructor] to other students. It’s awesome watching students’ progress on their mats and do things they never thought they’d be able to do.”

For now, the Budokon classes have ended for summer at FIU but Ranasinghe and Antunes made sure to mention that in Wynwood, there is a studio called “BOK Academy” that is open to anyone and every one looking to start or continue this workout.

“We invite everyone, regardless of their previous experience with yoga or martial arts to try Budokon and evaluate for themselves what they can take out of the practice,” Antunes said.

Students looking to explore different ways to expand their workout regimen, are encouraged to try Budokon. A lot can be taken away from these courses, according to the instructors and students, but that will ultimately be left for newcomers to discover.
Blocked shot ends basketball game in a tie

JASMINE CASIMIR
Contributing Writer
sports@fiusm.com

WELCOME HOME
New Assistant head coach excited to work with the women’s basketball team

The New York native moved to Spring Hill, Florida, 15 years ago. Silvestri attended Palm Beach Atlantic University where he played basketball. After suffering a few knee injuries, this led him to hang up his shoes for good. He later finished his degree at the University of Central Florida.

“I would have loved to play all four years, but it didn’t work out that way,” Silvestri said. “I regret not being able to finish, but at the same time, I look at it and say that my path brought me to this.”

Before joining FIU, Silvestri was an assistant head coach at UCF for two years and served as the director of Program Development before that. Earlier this year, he received an honor as one of the women’s basketball Coaches Association’s “Thirty Under 30.” The class recognizes 30 up-and-coming women’s basketball coaches, ages 30 and under in the sport. Silvestri was one of six male coaches to make the cut.

When coach Tiara Malcom began her search for an assistant head coach, Silvestri was at the top of her list. Silvestri received a call from Coach Malcom in May saying that she wanted him on her team as far as our...