ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Thank you to the editors of the following publications in which some of these poems first appeared, often in earlier forms: Pittsburgh Poetry Review, Dialogist, Gravel, Amethyst Arsenic, Juked, Origins, Brev Spread, The FEM, and Yellow Chair Review.

Special thanks to Campbell McGrath, Denise Duhamel, and Julie Marie Wade for their tireless efforts and enthusiasm and for making me a better and smarter person. Endless gratitude goes to Chloé Firetto-Toomey, Jaimie Eubanks, Megan Artlett, Carolina Suoto, and Bertha Crombert for their feedback, encouragement, and friendship.

Thank you to my parents, Zuhair and Elisa Jalloul, for their unrelenting support. And thank you to Brandon Anyzeski, for his patience and love through my roughest of drafts.
ABSTRACT OF THE THESIS

ADHANS & ORGASMS is a collection that includes both free verse and prose poetry. The poems shape the Florida landscape as well as cultural aspects of the speaker’s home life, providing insight to the hyphenated space between Arab and American societies. The frequent use of the female perspective and humor inform the speaker of her own past, while portraying a woman at odds with a patriarchal society.

Many of the poems explore the self through pop-culture, sexuality, and heritage. ADHANS & ORGASMS discusses the family unit’s dysfunction as it tries to bridge cultures. Romantic relationships are examined, and many of the poems consider the male muse in an effort to reverse societal expectations with unexpected subversion by turning the lens to focus on the male body.

ADHANS & ORGASMS has a variety of influences, especially third-wave feminist voices such as Elizabeth Bishop, Dorianne Laux, and Sharon Olds. Cultural poems were influenced by Richard Blanco and Naomi Shihab Nye.

I.

My mom says you can judge a man by his shoes.

When she met my dad,

he only wore Johnston & Murphy.

She says this impressively;

she means that he had style and enjoyed fashion;

she means that he stopped caring about this after marriage.

Recently, he bought a new pair of Nike sneakers and she’s suspicious

because why is he buying new shoes all of a sudden?

I tell her she’s crazy. He bought new shoes

because he needed new shoes.

If he were suddenly trying to impress some other woman,

white Nike sneakers are not the way to do that.

He also needs a new belt, I say,

and she agrees.

Once she told me there was no way

my boyfriend picked out his shoes on his own.
He must be cheating on me
with the woman who chose those shoes.
But I was with him when he bought them, I told her.
She looked at me, long and hard—
“are you sure?”

II.

By the time I was sixteen, I owned only heels.
Once I went surfing with some friends in Jupiter.
I—a native Floridian—did not even own flip-flops,
so when I went to the bathroom
and changed into my wet-suit,
I came out wearing a pair of four-inch slip-ons.
Currently I own several flats and sneakers and flip-flops,
but I still wear heels.
I still crave the authority of extra inches.

III.

My lover once had a huge collection of sneakers,
and he buys basketball shoes I find tacky and ornate,
but he says are “stylish.”
He rolls his pants up to accentuate his boots,
and I tease him for it.

What does this say about me?
In My Heaven

Though I wouldn’t feel hunger,
I’d sprinkle sea-salt on my toast
and drink mint tea on the days
when I wanted it to be cold.

I’d always resemble how I looked in that photo at the fair in January
when I was twenty-four.

I’d sleep in elaborate tree houses
shared with cats of all sizes,
falling asleep to their purrs,
with no fears of an allergic reaction.

Poems would be etched onto clouds,
so that you could see the words
bounce off the sunlight.

There would be no music
except the cicadas and cardinals,
no perfumes, except from flowers
caressed by hummingbirds and bees,
no buildings, nothing to taunt
the mountains and trees.
