

José Raúl García Barrios

Raúl García Barrios is a biologist and economist with a PhD in UC Berkeley in Agricultural and Natural Resource Economics. Currently he is professor at the Center for Multidisciplinary Research of the National University of Mexico, where he conducts theoretical studies on the dynamics of cooperation, tradition and community in modern societies. For more than three decades he has done research on natural resource management and local institutions in rural communities throughout Mexico. He is founder and/or advisor of various human rights and environmental organizations.