ELECTRICIDAD

by Luis Alfaro

Electricidad, has chained herself to her father's desiccated corpse and now holds solitary vigil in the front yard of the Casa de Atridas. No one can persuade this old school chola to abandon her enterprise—neither her grandmother, a tattooed original gangster, nor her sister, Ifigenia, nor the chorus of vecinas (neighbors) who gossip to each other and the audience.

Playwright, Luis Alfaro, has set his version of "Electra" in a contemporary, and ethnically specific world. It is a universal and timeless story flavored by the playwright's own sense of humor and mixed with the Aztec myths still embraced by his people. This "House of Atreus" goes back to the Zoot Suiters of the 40's and even further back to a time when the "City of Angels" was part of Mexico.
