FASHION! or, Life in New York
by Anna Cora Mowatt

In this delightful 19th century comedy with music, Anna Cora Mowatt satirized New York's emerging "beau monde" as the city became the grand emporium and money market of the western world. Their parade of elegance like a "moving bed of tulips," New Yorkers strutted down Broadway, slavishly following Parisian fashion in their dress and manner.

In this comedy of love and courtship, of Continental dandies and American patriots, of noble titles and ordinary folk, there are honest and true values which rise to each occasion. Set against a background of painted scenery and vaudeville song and dance, with such warmhearted tunes as "Call Me Pet Names," and "Why Did They Dig Ma's Grave So Deep?", the gentle satire of FASHION! or, Life in New York brings back the gaiety and charm of a Victorian extravaganza.
