

David K. Twigg is Director of the Jack D. Gordon Institute of Public Policy and Citizenship Studies at Florida International University. He held positions in local south Florida governments from 1974 to 1998; working with the administration of various federally funded programs in the areas of substance abuse rehabilitation and employment training. He has served as Adjunct Instructor in Political Science at Miami Dade College InterAmerican Campus and Barry University and has taught Public Administration and Political Science courses at FIU. His article, "Florida Elections and Hurricanes," was published in the Florida Political Chronicle Volume 19, Winter 2008-2009, and his book The Politics of Disaster: Tracking the Impact of Hurricane Andrew was published during the summer of 2012 (University Press of Florida). Twigg holds a BA in Government (Florida Southern College 1972), MSM in Public Administration (FIU 1973) and PhD in Political Science (FIU 2004 - dissertation entitled The Winds of Change? Exploring Political Effects of Hurricane Andrew).