History

The City of Delray Beach covers 10,240 acres in southeast Palm Beach County, and is located 52 miles north of Miami and 21 miles south of West Palm Beach. It has a population of over 64,000 people.

Maps from the 1850s identify an area of modern Delray Beach as Orange Grove Haulover. The modern history of the City of Delray Beach began in 1868 when Wisconsin natives William and Sara Gleason started purchasing large tracts of land in various parts of Florida, including the area that is now Delray Beach. William Gleason served as the state’s lieutenant governor from 1868 to 1870. In 1894 William S. Linton, a US congressman from Michigan, purchased land from the Model Land Company and the Gleason family. He returned in 1895 with a few settlers and named the area Linton. By 1896 the Florida East Coast Railway route reached Linton, which helped the town prosper. In 1898 Linton was renamed “Delray” after a town in Michigan. By 1910 Delray had 250 residents and by 1920 it had over 1,000. In 1911 the land west of the Intracoastal Waterway became the incorporated Town of Delray. In 1923 the land east of the waterway was incorporated as the Town of Delray Beach. The Florida land boom of the 1920 brought considerable investment to Delray, as tourism and real estate speculation became important parts of the economy. After the land boom collapsed in the mid-1920, property tax revenue fell, leaving Delray saddled with numerous debts. On May 11, 1927 the two towns were incorporated as the City of Delray Beach.

Community Dynamics

Downtown Delray Beach experienced a building boom in the period between 2003 and 2008. New mixed-use development projects have recently been constructed in the areas immediately north and south of Atlantic Avenue. In the wake of economic downturn, construction in Delray Beach has slowed.

Business Landscape

19% of Delray Beach residents work in the education, health and social services sector, 13% work in the professional, scientific, management and administrative sector, and another 13% in the arts, entertainment, accommodations and food industry sector. Major employers in Delray Beach include Meisner Electric and Hardrives, Inc.

Urban development in Delray Beach is driven by the Delray Beach Downtown Development Authority (DBDDA) and the Delray Beach Community Redevelopment Agency (CRA). The Delray Beach CRA’s mission is to foster and directly assist in the redevelopment of the Community Redevelopment Area in order to eliminate blight, create a sustainable downtown and encourage economic growth, thus improving the attractiveness and quality of life for the benefit of the CRA District and the City of Delray Beach as a whole.

The Delray Beach Downtown Development Authority was created in 1971 as a dependent special district of the City of Delray Beach. It is responsible for the economic development and improvement of the downtown area. The DBDDA derives most of its revenue from property taxes from the central business district of Delray Beach. Its main tasks are to preserve the city’s character, maintain its architectural and urban design quality, and chart a course for future growth while keeping historic preservation in mind.
