History

Located 5 miles from the Atlantic Ocean in Southeast Florida, Greenacres is the tenth largest city of the 38 municipalities in Palm Beach County. It is governed by a mayor and a 5-member city council. The City of Greenacres was founded in 1923 by Massachusetts native Lawrence Carter Swain, who moved to the area with his family in the early 1920s. The residential boom in the Town of Palm Beach and other coastal resort towns had generated a lot of housing for the wealthy, but there were few homes available for the middle class. Determined to provide a community for the middle class, Mr. Swain began purchasing property in the area, accumulating nearly 1,000 acres, which were divided into sections or “plats”. Plat II, half a mile west of Military Trail, became the “Original Section” of the city and is there to this day. The city was officially incorporated as “Greenacres City” in 1926, making it one of the oldest cities in Palm Beach County. The name was chosen by Mr. Swain’s office staff, which also chose the city’s slogan—“A Good Place to Live”.

The first recorded devastating hurricane, known as “the Big Blow”, hit Greenacres on September 19, 1926. The second such storm hit two years later almost to the day, on September 16, 1928. Both hurricanes caused great damage to Greenacres. For a short period in the 1940s Greenacres lost its status as a municipality, when a group of disgruntled residents petitioned the state legislature, resulting in the loss of the city charter. In 1947 the community was reestablished as a city and reincorporated.

In the 1980s Greenacres became the seventh largest and fastest growing city in central Palm Beach County. After a referendum held in 1984 several new buildings were constructed, including the new city hall on 10th Avenue North, a public safety complex and several recreation centers, which made Greenacres more popular. In the 1990s, the city’s residents voted to change its name to the City of Greenacres and annex portions of unincorporated Palm Beach County, all of which fueled rapid development and population growth.
Community Dynamics

The City of Greenacres has approximately 30,000 residents. Beginning in 2000, Greenacres underwent several enhancement and beautification projects. These included the construction of a community center, major parks, and the annexation of property south of the city. Other improvements included the construction of a municipal complex and a new public works facility. The city continues to be one of the fastest growing municipalities in South Florida. ²

The National Arbor Day Foundation has recognized the efforts of the City of Greenacres to plant and maintain trees in public spaces by giving it a “Tree City USA” designation for 18 consecutive years. America’s Promise-The Alliance for Youth, the nation’s largest alliance dedicated to children and youth, recognized Greenacres as one of the “100 Best Communities for Young People” in 2007 and 2008. ² The city is considered to be a well-planned, safe and attractive community, with an efficient and effective local government.

The city has 16,685 dwelling units providing diversity in type (single family, condominiums, villas, townhomes and apartments) and price range.
