Events promote breast cancer awareness

By KATHERINE REALE Contributing Writer

This year, over 215,000 women will learn that they suffer from breast cancer, the most commonly diagnosed non-skin cancer among females.

As those numbers rise, many forget that the illness remains one of the most curable cancers, with only 18 deaths for every 100 women diagnosed this year.

In order to educate the community about this disease and its prevention, FIU has set up special events during the month of October, Breast Cancer Awareness month.

The health care centers at both University Park and Biscayne Bay campuses are offering free breast cancer screenings during October to help female students understand the necessity of an annual clinical breast exam.

"Breast cancer is very curable if it’s caught before it [has] spread,” said Sara Baker, resident nurse of the University Health Center at BBC.

"Breasts are easy to examine. You can’t do this to your lungs,” she said, poking her ribcage.

According to research performed by the American Cancer Society, the earlier a tumor is caught, the greater a patient’s chances of survival.

In fact, the ACS estimates a 97% five-year survival rate for women with breast cancer caught before they spread to other areas of the body.

"Many lives have been touched by this disease,” Morgan said. “Yet—the moment people hear about it, they go the other way.”

Junior Marlene Quincoces, a liberal studies major, currently serves as the FIU event mentor for “Relay for Life,” an annual overnight walk-a-thon that raises funds for the ACS and its research.

“I have been a part of this amazing event for five years now, and my story is pretty simple,” Quincoces said. “I believe that everyone should live happily, free of pain and suffering. Unfortunately, there are so many people afflicted with this disease that are suffering, and this is one way we can help.”

To aid early detection, the ACS recommends that all women over the age of 40 have a mammogram every one to two years and a yearly clinical exam.

Mammography is not recommended for younger women, as their more fibrous breast tissue may yield false positives. A lump found in a young woman’s breast is usually examined by ultra-sound. All women, regardless of age, should perform a monthly breast self-examination and should encourage each other to do the same.

“Young women can be the biggest sup- port systems for their moms and aunts [they should] encourage them to get exams,” Velez said.

New program set to deter students’ plagiarism

By JAMIE KLAPHOZ Contributing Writer

The factors might be many: laziness, procrastination, lack of time or any emergency to spring up at the last minute. Whatever the case may be, some students resort to plagiarism as a last resort when that crucial paper is due, and in the past decade, the internet has made cheating as simple as the press of a button.

At FIU, university officials have decided to take action this semester to discourage students from turning in the work of others. For this reason, officials registered Turnitin.com.

Turnitin.com, established in 1994, was one of the first websites of its kind to be created.

Its system is able to detect plagiarism by comparing student papers that professors submit to Turnitin on the internet.

This process takes thirty sec- onds and, when complete, the professor receives an “Originality Report,” with all plagiarized passages highlighted.

Although the university is just trying Turnitin.com for a semes- ter, approximately sixty teachers have signed up to use it.

“I have a little more assurance that my students are writing their own papers,” said Barbara Weitz, an English professor, who recently began using the program in her own class.

Most faculty members would agree that the biggest perk about using Turnitin.com is that stu- dents will not attempt to cheat because they know the program will catch them.

“We are looking at it to deter plagiarism,” said Dr. Kenneth Johnson, assistant vice president of Academic Affairs.

However, plagiarism detection is just one of the many services that the Turnitin.com provides for professors.

Peer Review allows students to evaluate each other’s writing anonymously, while Grade Mark allows professors to grade assign- ments using the system.

Grade Book, another pro- gram within the site, lets teachers manage grades and attendance.

With Digital Portfolio, stu- dents can track their academic progress over the length of their entire college career.

With all of these services, Turnitin.com may soon become a part of the FIU academic com- munity life.

So far, the program has proven to be more than helpful.

During the height of hur- ricanic season in September, Johnson took advantage of the various programs to keep in touch with his students, even though classes were cancelled.

He was able to post assign- ments on the site and have discussions, so that when the university reopened, his stu- dents were not behind on their classwork.

If FIU officials decide to commit to the system, it is possi- ble that teachers will begin using the program as soon as next semester.

However, the site’s fees are somewhat expensive, and more university officials need to commit to it during the trial period before it can be used in the future.

“Although some of my stu- dents are frustrated with kinks in the system, once you get used to it, it really can work,” Weitz said.

OPINION

WHAT DO YOU THINK?
Halloween lands on a Sunday this year, how will you celebrate?

• Probably do nothing because there’s class the next day.
• Pass out candy or take a relative trick-or-treating.
• Party all night or participate in some act of delinquency.
• Halloween is “The Devil.”

WINNER & LOSER

WINNER
Boston Red Sox fans: After coming back from a three game deficit, the Red Sox “reversed the curse” and thousands of baseball fans went nuts. In New York, doctors offices were flooded with Yankee fans puzzled by a foreign tingly sensation: humiliation.

LOSER
One dramatic Iranian: In Iran, a man fought with a police officer after receiving a parking ticket, then out of frustration, poured petrol on his car and set it on fire. The fire starter made no comment, especially after realizing his cell phone was in the car.

QUOTABLES

“Well, there was no sex for 14 days.”  — Arnold Schwarzenegger, governor of California, on how his wife, demcrat Maria Shriver, reacted to his speech supporting President Bush.

“The tattoos, the blood, cutting myself – it’s all very much who I am.”  — Angelina Jolie, actress, in a recent interview with Esquire magazine.

“The press has broadly and nobly eroded the public trust. What I’m advocating is the media come back and trust. What I’m advocating is the media come back and realize his speech supporting President Bush.

Breasts are easy to examine. You can’t do this to your lung. (Pokes at her rib cage.)”  — Sara Baker, resident nurse of the University Health Center at BBC, on breast self-exams.

Apartment complex loses its seclusion

By JONATHAN BANKE
Staff Writer

It has been over a month since school started, and little seems to have changed to the new entrance still under construction connecting the University Park Apartments to Campus Drive. On a warm Thursday afternoon, I sat at my desk in my apartment building and gazed off into the distance down Garden Drive to the west, into the sunset, waiting for our new intersection to open.

Traffic continually backed up, sometimes twenty or thirty cars deep on the primary loop around school. It seems the problem builds more everyday, with no relief in sight.

The first time I saw construction workers laying pavement, I was stunned. This is my fourth year in the apartments, and the construction of the new road insulted me. As large as our campus is, the UPAPA housing complex is the only building or area at University Park that is completely isolated.

Residents, staff and visitors must briefly leave campus to enter our facility. With only one way in and one way out, most people seen around the apartments have a reason to be there.

More relaxed than other student housing areas, the atmosphere of our complex is calm and private.

Ask any new commuter students where the University Park Apartments are located, and they are likely to respond, “We have an apartment complex on campus!”

The serenity is priceless if you appreciate a little peace and quiet, especially during finals week.

The new construction is going to change everything.

At first I thought it was a horrible decision to build a new entrance to my apartment complex, but it must have been the season of political flip-flop in full swing, because in the first week or two of the semester, something changed my mind. The more I thought about it, the more the new road grew on me.

To drive simply to the Graham Center, for example, I would no longer have to go through two lights and a sometimes-nightmarish traffic circle. Sudden, one quick left, and there it is.

Access to the rest of campus will also be much easier thanks to our new roadway.

I believe my fears of Garden Drive becoming another Southwest 16th Street I believe are overexaggerated.

Most commuters will continue to leave campus via Southwest 16th Street, Southwest 8th Street or the newly constructed drive just east of the Green Parking Garage.

I am sure traffic will increase slightly, but nothing that will be too noticeable to residents here at the University Park Apartments.

This new accessibility will make commuting to and from practice and games much easier for our many athletes in the apartments. It will also make things easier for students who want to cheer on our many sports teams.

Last but not least, in an emergency, university police and other authorities may be able to save precious time arriving on scene.

The main question still left unanswered, however, is why hasn’t the entrance been open to the public?

Over the phone, university parking and traffic officials said that they had no idea why the road was closed and did not even have an estimate far when it would be open.

Perhaps, work days and opportunities to finish the entrance have been disappearing with the hurricane threats.

However, as a former road worker, a quick visual inspection shows no problems with the asphalt, road paint and traffic signs.

Electrical work is to the road’s shoulder, away from the intersection.

“This work has nothing to do with the road. I’m not sure why this road is still closed,” said sophomore Cody Jacobs, a concerned UPAPA electrical worker and UPAPA citizen.

And so, the question still remains: When will this intersection be opened? University Park Apartment front-desk workers did not have an answer and neither did an aide on patrol from Public Safety.

With housing costs continuing to rise, students deserve explanation.
LEXINGTON, Ky. – Pumpkins for pies. Pumpkins for plain old jack-o’-lanterns. We’re all familiar with those. But Dr. Vu Nguyen takes one of those big orange orbs dotting the fields and turns it into an art form.

He carves portraits out of his pumpkins.

“Orami is my first love. I do more origami than anything else, but this is fun,” said Nguyen, 39, a psychiatrist. Nguyen (pronounced Win), a native of Vietnam whose family came to Louisville, Ky., in 1975, said he never carved pumpkins as a child. It was not part of Vietnamese culture. In Kentucky, he said, “maybe once my dad carved a face, with face, with triangles for the eyes and nose.”

Five years ago, Nguyen became interested in carving “just for the heck of it,” he said. “I used a knife – it didn’t work very well – to carve different faces like a cat’s face and lots of designs.”

His carvings became more elaborate, and Nguyen searched the Internet for new ideas; he found directions for doing photographic portraits.

Each pumpkin portrait takes about three hours from start to finish.

“Like with anything, the more you do it, the faster you get, and you begin to develop your techniques,” he said.

The keys to success are choosing a large pumpkin and sturdy tools. Nguyen doesn’t use pumpkin carving kits because the tools aren’t big enough, strong enough or sharp enough. He buys tools designed for wood carving and making pottery.

Instead of using a knife, he bought a scroll-saw blade from the hardware store and a small handle for it.

“Once you start cutting away the mid-tones, achieving different shades of gray, is when I have to use a lot of artistry,” he said.

The Michelangelo of the pumpkin patch will start the week before Halloween, carving one or two every night, he said. Some will be portraits, and others will be what Nguyen calls extreme pumpkins: boldly carved, with a pyrotechnic aspect as flames shoot out the top.

All will be used as decorations for the Halloween party he and his sister, Trang, are giving Halloween weekend.

STEP-BY-STEP

To demonstrate how to do a pumpkin portrait, Vu Nguyen carved a likeness of his sister, Trang, a graphic designer in the Lexington Herald-Leader advertising creative services department.

We’ve also included tips from a Web site, www.geekculture.com/joyoftech/joystuff/macolanternshtml.html.

–The tools: You’ll need a scroll-saw blade and handle, small paring knife, scoop, wood carving tools, face-paint crayon and projector.

–The pumpkin: Start with a large pumpkin. If the pumpkin is too small, you’ll go crazy trying to carve the intricate details.

–The cuts: Cut a generous-size lid out with dishwasher soap and water.

–Wash and rinse: When finished, put the pumpkin in the sink, and wash away the remaining crayon lines with soap and a sponge.

–The secret to aging: Rub Vaseline or a small handle for it.

–The transfer: With a small tracer pen, trace around the photo onto the pumpkin. He then traced the features, including the nose and mouth, with face-paint crayon.

–The cuts: With an X-acto knife, cut through the rind. The light helps when removing the color from the picture and to boost the contrast between black and white tones. Leave gray tones because that is what will distinguish the portrait from the usual jack-o’-lantern carvings.

The transfer. With a small tracer projector bought at a crafts store, Nguyen projected the photo onto the side of the pumpkin. He then traced the features, including the nose and mouth, with face-paint crayon.

He also outlined areas on the nose, cheeks and forehead that were white tones.

–The cuts: With an X-acto knife, cut around the crayon tracings. Next, cut out the white highlights on the nose, cheeks and forehead. Keep the photograph close by to refer to.

–The shave: Before shaving away rind from the gray areas to create different tones, Nguyen put a white Christmas light inside the pumpkin to shine through the rind. The light helps when you shave away layers of pumpkin pulp, creating a three-dimensional affect.

–Wash and rinse: When finished, put the pumpkin in the sink, and wash away the remaining crayon lines with soap and a sponge.

–The secret to aging: Rub Vaseline to seal the surface and hold in moisture. WD-40 also works.

Award-winning poet brings words to life at BBC

By JOHN RUBIO
Contributing Writer

Writers on the Bay brings poet Tony Hoagland to Florida International University. His works include “Sweet Ruin” (1992), which was chosen by Donald Justice for the 1992 Brittingham Prize in Poetry and won the Zacharis Award from Emerson College and “Donkey Gospel” (1998), winner of the James Laughlin Award. His latest collection is “What Narcissism Means to Me” (Graywolf Press, 2003).

According to The New York Times Book Review, “What Narcissism Means to Me” “has the appeal of a mean but funny friend, a smart aleck you can’t dismiss.”

The award-winning poet will bring his words to life Thursday Oct. 28th at FIU’s Biscayne Bay campus, AC1364. The poetry reading will begin at 8p.m.

“Dickhead,” “Leaving Yourself Behind,” “I Had Watched a Lot of Kung Fu Episdoes,” “Suicide Song,” and “Hate Hotel,” are some of Tony Hoagland’s vivid poems which the reader with eye-grabbing words is just the beginning of what Mr. Hoagland does. Using wit and humor, this wordsmith captures his readers’ attention with insightful and creative poems. At the turn of every page there is the anticipation of what else is in store. Whether its laughter, sadness or wonder, his poems are honest and direct, at times analyzing life and everyone’s involvement in it.

“We assumed we were fighting the Time Wars: we could feel it speeding up, rapidly escaping, like the bus from a lakeshilly. We were trying to plug it, to slow it down, to accelerate, but none of us was having much success” – “The Time Wars.”

Hoagland’s poetic collections also possess blunt truth and touch upon a vast spectrum of issues like racism, capitalism, homosexuality and human emotion. Instead of preaching, he shares his own experiences, giving the reader a glimpse into his life and delves into unanswered questions.

“Nothing more I live by the law of me.”

“Nothing more I live by the law of me.”

And dying you know yours a serious ingratitude”

“Suicide Song.”

Skindred mix reggae and metal

By LEONCIO ALVAREZ
Page Designer

Who would have thought the day would come when reggae and heavy metal would join together to become a mix of clashing, inharmonic noise? Well, that day is here, and it has come to us in the form of a Ukrainian band called Skindred. It’s Beanie Man, meets SlipKnot, meets Godsmack, meets The Clash, meets vomit.

Somehow the band managed to make the U.S. New Artist Top 10, but, since then, radio stations aren’t really playing their new single, “Nobody.” In my opinion, they are just another band to add to the list of others that achieved the U.S. crossover, but they probably won’t last long enough to mark their territory.

I must admit, the idea of combining hip-hop, reggae, dancehall and heavy metal is very imaginative, and, to some extent, creative, but who honestly is going to listen to it?

Music listeners interested in heavy metal probably hate reggae, and vice versa, causing a never-ending chain of half-fulfilled listeners not very ecstatic to press the next button on their cd players, and pushed more towards the off.

Skindred’s songs have been available over the Internet since about 2001 and recently became available in the U.S. on their debut album, Babylon. The album showcases a variety of different sounding songs, each with its own musical genre.

The first couple of songs feature the reggae-sounding lead vocalist rapping a tongue twister of words that really doesn’t make much sense under a microscope, including such cliché lyrics as, “My sound we come to take over, MC you better look over your shoulder, yeah you know were on, oh well now...” All I want to do is make the people rock, but then I heard the words, I never trusted you lot, and why don’t you go back to Africa.”

Just because the lyrics and overall musical quality of the band doesn’t seem to impress even Britney Spears fans, drummer Dirty Arya seems to know what he is doing.

If you actually analyze the type of approach he is taking, you will note that he is trying his best to keep an actual musical and rhythmic style and sense.

Running comes naturally for Howard

By ANDONI GONZALEZ-RUA Contributing Writer

The FIU Golden Panthers Women’s Cross Country team is streaking toward the Sun Belt Conference meet with only one thing on their minds: reaching the NCAA Regional meet.

Having posted a personal record in her last meet at the Disney Classic, Howard is eying a top-ten finish in the conference, something her coach Steve Rubin stressed earlier this season.

The Beacon sat down with Howard and found out about preparations before a big race and the mental efforts needed to get through it.

Q: When did you first start running and whom can be credited with getting you started?

A: I started running in sixth grade. I ran the mile well in gym class, and my PE teacher told me I should join the track team.

Q: Why did you decide to come and run at FIU?

A: The experience to be in a culturally diverse atmosphere brought me to FIU.

Q: Who has been your biggest influence as a student athlete at FIU?

A: Coach Salvat, he has always been encouraging to me [and has] stuck by me through tough times. [He has] always believed in me.

Q: Describe a typical day in the life of Amanda Howard?

A: [I] wake up at 6:00 a.m., pick up my teammates, and depending on what day it is, practice could be a long run followed by weight training or a hard workout. [Workouts include] eight 800’s with a mile and a half warm up and a mile and a half cool down. I always eat breakfast with some of my teammates after practice, usually in the cafeteria. [Then] I go to class throughout the day, sometimes study at night, and then go to bed.

Q: Describe a typical race day?

A: I wake up and eat a banana or have a small breakfast depending on what time the race is. [Then we] get to the course about an hour and-a-half before the race starts, try to relax, warm up and then we stretch about an hour before the start. When the gun goes off we try to get out quick so we don’t get stuck behind people.

[You] try to keep your mind strong and focused on the race. I try to think of all the training and sacrifices I have made to run a good race and, at the same time, keep my body relaxed. [You] give it all you got till the end, and when the race is over [you] try to get everyone together to cool down and talk about how they did and how they felt during the race. We always congratulate and support one another on the race.

Q: What are the types of things that are running through your head before the gun is shot on race day? How about during the race as well as after?

A: Before the race I try to stay calm and not even think about it. [I] forget where I am and think about something else … lose myself for a couple of minutes. During the race all I think about is the hard work I put into every practice, waking up early every morning to make myself a better runner as well as all the times I had to go to bed earlier than I would have liked because I had to wake up for practice or weight lifting.

I tell myself not to slow down because I know that my teammates are working just as hard as I am and feeling just as tired as I am; [you] keep pushing through for one another. After we replay it back in my head and try to make sure there were no times we were given.

Q: Having run last year, what are you doing differently at races as well as at practice this year? How have you benefited from these changes?

A: I have been more confident in myself this year, and I think that has made the biggest difference, not expecting to be at a certain time or place.

Q: What are your personal expectations for the Sun Belt Conference meet and about the rest of the team?

A: I would like to place in the top ten, which is all conference. For the team, I think we are all going to run very well. Everyone is mentally strong and ready to show up and run. I think we will get first or second … hope for the best.

Q: You still have two full years of eligibility left after this season, what do you hope to accomplish by the end of your career at FIU?

A: I hope to win a team conference title and individual All-Conference one too. I look to break 18:00 for five kilometers as well.

America’s past time is still a favorite

Who wrote this script? Sure, the Boston Red Sox were favored coming into the American League Championship Series to finally beat the Yankees, dispel the infamous curse, and make a World Series appearance for the first time since 1986.

But after being dominated by Pedro’s pin-striped daddies in a five-game straight games series, even the most optimistic Beantowners considered burying themselves in the Big Papi Grins.

Things like this aren’t supposed to happen. Maybe we should be expecting this sort of thing, considering who won the last three World Series Championships.

I think I’m finally starting to figure this out. We have to throw logic and probability to the wind and learn to expect the most ridiculously implausible outcomes out of the Major League baseball playoffs.

How else could you explain the long-shot Florida Marlins beating the Yankees in game six, in the Bronx, on a complete game shutout by a short-rested Josh Beckett in ’03? Or the ‘02 World Series in which Anaheim found itself down three games to two against Barry Bonds’ Giants?

The Cinderella Angels overcame a 5-0 deficit in game six to force a game seven. John Lackey became the first rookie pitcher in 93 years to win a World Series game seven and pull that off.

How about the four-year-old Diamondbacks winning it all in ’01? The D’backs lost three straight games in Arizona before the Big Unit dominated the Yanks to force what turned into one of the best deciding games in World Series history.

Talk about a story-book finish. Co-MVPs Curt Schilling and Randy Johnson started and closed the game, respectively.

The Red Sox are simply the most commendable trend that has brought baseball back to near National Football League status: wildly dramatic post-season play, preferably involving the demise of the Evil Empire.

Yet, this moment in baseball history is somehow different from those big wins of the past three years.

This championship series managed to completely overshadow the National League Conference Series in which baseball’s best team may reside, possesses that ‘where were you’ quality that survives generational boundaries.

This will be the thing they talk about in Boston for as long as the Bobby Thompson home run survival in New York. Old men with nasal accents will tell their grand kids how the Sox were just an inning away from being swept by the Yankees in 2004.

They’ll recall how Hall-of-Famer Mariano Rivera, the most dependable big game closer of the era, was three outs away from handing Boston its most embarrassing loss in Fenway history and blew it.

The old men with their nos- talgic grins will tell the story of Curt Schilling, who pitched a
