8-9-2004

The Beacon, August 9, 2004

Florida International University

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.fiu.edu/student_newspaper

Recommended Citation
http://digitalcommons.fiu.edu/student_newspaper/111

This work is brought to you for free and open access by the Special Collections and University Archives at FIU Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Panther Press (formerly The Beacon) by an authorized administrator of FIU Digital Commons. For more information, please contact dcc@fiu.edu.
Private donation makes FIU history

College of Business Administration receives a major boost through a $5 million grant

By C. JOEL MARINO
Assistant News Editor

This summer, the FIU College of Business Administration received what is considered to be the highest cash gift ever given to the university by a single individual: a $5 million grant donated to the school on behalf of R. Kirk Landon, retired CEO of American Bankers Insurance Group.

The grant, because of its massive sum, will now be eligible for the Florida Matching Funds Program, raising the total worth of the gift to $10 million.

Landon, 75, is best known for having made child-care programs available to all his company’s employees, one of many corporate innovations made during his 47 years as the group’s chairman.

Most recently, he has devoted his time and money to major philanthropic projects, including donations to such organizations as the Miami Children’s Museum, the Miami-Dade Community Partnership for the Homeless and the construction of recreational parks on the grounds of the Miami Project to Cure Paralysis and the Georgia Institute of Technology.

Because of this donation, FIU President Modesto A. Maidique has announced the creation of an undergraduate school of business which will be named in Landon’s honor.

“Our faculty and students will be proud to work within a school that carries the Landon name,” said Joyce Elam, executive dean of the College of Business. “He’s a leader, whose vision and values will inspire us.”

Tuition at the university will continue to subsidize university education and the government may not be able to afford it.

But the FIU administration hopes the money will be spent on education, research, and the improving of the campus.

GENEROUS BENEFACCTOR: Philanthropist R. Kirk Landon recently awarded a $5 million to the FIU College of Business Administration, the largest individual donation ever given to the university.

By VANESSA GOMEZ
News Editor

University students are taking classes that are not graduation requirements for their majors, consequently costing taxpayers approximately $62 million a year, according to a state audit last month.

Auditors suggested state lawmakers put pressure on the students exceeding the credits for graduation in order to reward those who graduate on time to cut back losses.

Legislative auditors are worried because student enrollment is quickly growing and the government may not be able to continue to subsidize university education at the same rate.

The state audit estimates enrollment to grow five percent a year over the next five years in state universities and community colleges.

The state currently picks up about 75 percent of the cost for in-state students attending one of Florida’s public universities.

In-state students will pay about $2,070 a year for full-time tuition -- 15 credits a semester, not counting fees.

The state picks up the tab for about $6,488 in costs per student at state universities and community colleges.

“My parents told me that if I did not get a scholarship, I was going to have to study in Costa Rica, so I worked hard and got the scholarship. Now they want me to take it away, I don’t think it’s fair,” said Joyce Elam, executive dean of the College of Business.

The college currently enrolls approximately 6,000 students each year, of which 800 are expected to follow further degrees in the graduate school.

“Since FIU is producing the business leaders of tomorrow, it makes sense to give to FIU,” said Landon in an interview for FIU Magazine.

Most recently, the college’s close associate, the FIU Global Entrepreneurship Center, received a $3 million grant from the nationally recognized Ewing Marion Kauffman Foundation.

Through donations such as these, the FIU administration hopes more recognition will be given to the growing school.

Earlier this year Gov. Jeb Bush tried to pass a “block tuition” initiative, his way of addressing the problem, but the initiative failed in the Legislature.

Block tuition means a student will be charged the same amount per semester regardless of how many credit hours they take, hence students who do not carry a full time load of classes will lose money.

The initiative also penalizes students who take too many classes out of their educational track.

“People are taking as many classes as they can as it is. “And even if students find the time to attend classes, it would be difficult to pass with an acceptable grade. If they do block tuition at FIU they would be stealing our money.”

A four-year bachelor’s degree is apparently a luxury since according to statistics from Florida’s Department of Education, more than 60 percent of students take six years to graduate with a bachelor’s degree.

“I can assure you that the Legislature will take a very hard look at this,” said Sen. Ken Pruitt (R), supporter of Bright Futures Scholarship and chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee. “We don’t have the luxury of having a student...
NEWSFLASH

ON CAMPUS

$1.4 million grant awarded to Nursing School

The FIU School of Nursing has recently received a $1.4 million grant from the U.S. Department of Labor.

The award, which will be used for the growth and expansion of the university’s New Americans in Nursing program, is part of a federal government initiative to identify and solve massive workforce shortages in mostly metropolitan areas.

The two-year-old nursing project seeks to provide scholarships and a long-distance learning effort for students in Orlando.

HEALTH

Researchers say young people complacent about HIV

People younger than 25-one-third of the U.S. population-account for about 50 percent of all new HIV infections in this country, according to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The CDC reports that most young patients are infected through sex. Young white men continue to make up a significant number of those patients. But blacks are disproportionately affected, accounting for more than half of these new infections.

The median age when an HIV patient is first diagnosed with the disease has fallen steadily from 35 in 1978 to 25 in 1990. Researchers agree that AIDS patients have been getting younger through the years.

Don Maison, president and chief executive officer of AIDS Services of Dallas said education can do only so much. Young people are always going to experiment.

“It has to do with the mentality you have when you’re 18 years old,” he said. “You think you’re bulletproof. You’re healthy; you’re vibrant. Those behaviors—you don’t think they’ll affect you.”

Efforts to foil terrorism attacks heightened

A peculiar string of terrorist attacks in the United States, Britain and elsewhere this week has sent authorities into a high alert.

The arrests of Yassin Muhammad Mosharref Hossain, 49—which officials said were unrelated to the heightened terror alert—announced last Sunday-stem from an FBI sting operation.

An FBI informant posed as an arms salesman involved in a purported plot to sell shoulder-fired missiles and assassinate Pakistan’s ambassador to the United Nations.

The officials claim that there is evidence that two men were connected with Ansar al-Islam, a violent Islamist group that operated in semiautonomous regions of northern Iraq before the March 2003 U.S. invasion.

President Bush, facing the voters in three months, and his aides are striving to demonstrate that they are prevailing in the war on terrorism, and the White House earlier this week launched an offensive to justify its heightened terror alert.

Critics have questioned the timing of the alert and recent terrorist-related actions in Pakistan, Britain and elsewhere.

CLASSIFIED

HELP WANTED

POSITION AVAILABLE

Small local clothing manufacturer seeks part-time help in assistant office management.

Responsibilities to include: Data entry, inventory management, warehouse organization, telephone reception, web orders and sales. Flexible hours. $7-8 an hour. Contact Donald fax 305-661-5551, 305-661-7200, email: sailangl@ix.netcom.com

SALES EXPERIENCE

Spanish helpful, variable hours, salary or commission, good English skills, marketing majors a plus, near Doral South Hialeah Area. Contact Ed Martin 305-551-6926

Earn $50.00 to participate in Cofee Focus Group. Requirements: 25 years old or older, Hispanic born in U.S. Call 305-648-1616 arregu@bellsouth.net

For Rent

APARTMENT FOR RENT
Near F.I.U., South Campus.
One bedroom, bath, kitchenette.
Utilities, washer/dryer, cable included. Includes private entrance/parking.
Call 305-555-2499

ROOM FOR RENT
All included. TV, Fast Internet. Private entrance. Parking $375.00 per month. Area 40th St. SW. 67th AVE. 5 min. from here. Call 305-667-9009.

ROOM FOR RENT
Master Bedroom. In quiet home, 5 min. away from FIU, fully furnished, with microwave and fridge. $325 a month with $150 deposit.
Call 305-223-3843
Leave a message

SERVICES

AUTOMOTIVE

In need of car
Looking for a decent car, year ’96 and beyond, two door. Preferably a Honda, from $2,500-$3,500.
Please call 786-252-5155.

TRANSCRIBERS

FULL-TIME/PART-TIME
WORK IN THE NEW FIELD OF VIDEO, TRANSCRIPTIONS AND CLOSED-CAPTIONING.
MUST OWN HOME COMPUTER WITH MS WORD AND BE COMPUTER LITERATE. EMAIL RESUME TO OUR N. MIAMI LOCATION BLUERESUMES@AOL.COM AS RESUME NAME.DOC

DESIGNERS WANTED!
The Beacon is seeking applicants with media layout/design experience in Adobe InDesign, Adobe Photoshop and Adobe Pagemaker. Stop by GC 210 or WUC 124 to apply.

SHASHANK BENGALI
Knight Ridder Newspapers
U.S. law enforcement and intelligence officials said Thursday they have launched a massive, worldwide effort to foil planned terrorist attacks in the United States and Britain this fall, and have apprehended an al-Qaida operative with knowledge of the plans.

The operative, Abu Eissa al-Hindi, was arrested Tuesday by British authorities, who acted on a tip from U.S. intelligence.

Al Hindi’s name came to light in computer files seized last month in Pakistan showing the terror network conducted surveillance on financial centers in the United States, a U.S. official said. Authorities say they are trying to determine whether al Hindi, who has not been charged, and others detained in Pakistan have accomplices in the United States.

Beyond the arrests in Britain and Pakistan, police have apprehended dozens of suspected terrorists.

Following the bombings in Spain, Turkey and Saudi Arabia authorities have reacted with a more aggressive roundup of al-Qaida surrogates and have shown more willingness to share intelligence across borders.

In the United States, officials announced the arrest of two men associated with a mosque in Albany, N.Y., on charges of money laundering.

The arrests of Yassin Muhammad Mosharref Hossain, 49—which officials said were unrelated to the heightened terror alert—announced last Sunday-stem from an FBI sting operation.

The arrest of Abu Eissa al-Hindi, who has not been previously fingerprinted and has ties to the Pakistan-based al-Qaida network, marked the latest in a string of arrests of suspected terrorists around the globe.

Efforts to foil terrorism attacks heightened

The arrests of Yassin Muhammad Mosharref Hossain, 49—which officials said were unrelated to the heightened terror alert—announced last Sunday-stem from an FBI sting operation.

An FBI informant posed as an arms salesman involved in a purported plot to sell shoulder-fired missiles and assassinate Pakistan’s ambassador to the United Nations.

The officials claim that there is evidence that two men were connected with Ansar al-Islam, a violent Islamist group that operated in semiautonomous regions of northern Iraq before the March 2003 U.S. invasion.

President Bush, facing the voters in three months, and his aides are striving to demonstrate that they are prevailing in the war on terrorism, and the White House earlier this week launched an offensive to justify its heightened terror alert.

Critics have questioned the timing of the alert and recent terrorist-related actions in Pakistan, Britain and elsewhere.

The arrest of Abu Eissa al-Hindi, who has not been previously fingerprinted and has ties to the Pakistan-based al-Qaida network, marked the latest in a string of arrests of suspected terrorists around the globe.

Efforts to foil terrorism attacks heightened

The arrests of Yassin Muhammad Mosharref Hossain, 49—which officials said were unrelated to the heightened terror alert—announced last Sunday-stem from an FBI sting operation.

An FBI informant posed as an arms salesman involved in a purported plot to sell shoulder-fired missiles and assassinate Pakistan’s ambassador to the United Nations.

The officials claim that there is evidence that two men were connected with Ansar al-Islam, a violent Islamist group that operated in semiautonomous regions of northern Iraq before the March 2003 U.S. invasion.

President Bush, facing the voters in three months, and his aides are striving to demonstrate that they are prevailing in the war on terrorism, and the White House earlier this week launched an offensive to justify its heightened terror alert.

Critics have questioned the timing of the alert and recent terrorist-related actions in Pakistan, Britain and elsewhere.

The arrest of Abu Eissa al-Hindi, who has not been previously fingerprinted and has ties to the Pakistan-based al-Qaida network, marked the latest in a string of arrests of suspected terrorists around the globe.

Efforts to foil terrorism attacks heightened

The arrests of Yassin Muhammad Mosharref Hossain, 49—which officials said were unrelated to the heightened terror alert—announced last Sunday-stem from an FBI sting operation.

An FBI informant posed as an arms salesman involved in a purported plot to sell shoulder-fired missiles and assassinate Pakistan’s ambassador to the United Nations.

The officials claim that there is evidence that two men were connected with Ansar al-Islam, a violent Islamist group that operated in semiautonomous regions of northern Iraq before the March 2003 U.S. invasion.

President Bush, facing the voters in three months, and his aides are striving to demonstrate that they are prevailing in the war on terrorism, and the White House earlier this week launched an offensive to justify its heightened terror alert.

Critics have questioned the timing of the alert and recent terrorist-related actions in Pakistan, Britain and elsewhere.
Forensics programs get boost from real-life cases in media

By REBECCA JOHNSON
Knight Ridder Newspapers

Blood spatter. Bullet trajectories. Dead bodies. Stacey Speer wanted to study them all.

But when she went looking for an undergraduate forensic science program after a high school class piqued her interest, she found few options out there.

So Speer, 24, spent four years studying biomedical engineering until she could fuel her primary interest: forensics. Now she’s learning crime scene investigation techniques such as matching tool markings to body parts and analyzing trace materials.

The new buzz is leaving some university professors of established programs scratching their heads.

“Both our undergraduate and graduate programs have been around more than 30 years,” said Howard Harris, a forensic science professor at the University of New Haven in Connecticut. “Now, all of a sudden, the undergraduate programs are popping up like mushrooms.”

Blame it on “CSI.” Or O.J. Both the crime-show activities, such as fingerprint identification, forensic photography and blood-spatter pattern examination, have become more entrenching in law enforcement, there is a need for more labs and personnel.”

West Virginia University, for example, created its undergraduate forensic identification program at the request of the FBI, said Clifton Bishop, the program director.

“In 2001, just a couple years after its inception, a mere three students graduated in this field,” Bishop said. “This year, nearly 400 students are majoring in forensic biology, forensic chemistry or forensic examination.

Forensic examination includes common crime-show activities, such as fingerprint matching tool markings of the university’s two houses devoted to crime scene investigation instruction.

As the population increases, the number of crimes goes up,” said Kenneth Melson, president of the American Academy of Forensic Sciences, a professional organization with 5,000 members.

The main myth that has to be dispelled is that forensic science is the same as crime scene investigation. The other myth is that people in the labs solve cases. Lawyers solve cases. People in the labs provide the evidence.”

Ted Nutall
Head of the Forensics Program at Lock Haven University

“Because the role of forensic scientists is becoming more entrenched in law enforcement, there is a need for more labs and personnel.”

By REBECCA JOHNSON

Florida college students saying ‘No’ to block-tuition stay there for six years. We don’t have a choice. We’ve got to have the space,” Pruitt told The Miami Herald in a recent article.

Rosa Jones, vice president of academic affairs and undergraduate education at FIU, noted that when students come to the school as freshmen they are sometimes not quite sure of what they want to study.

“The idea of moving students as quickly as you can through the process is not realistic,” Jones said.

Auditors cited Florida A&M University in Tallahassee and FIU as having the highest percentage of 2002 and 2003 graduates with excess credit hours. In 2002, 57 percent of FIU’s graduating class had so-called excess hours, the report said.

Florida State University— with 31% had the lowest percentage of graduates exceeding that standard among the 10 state public universities studied.

“Our course we have more hours, there are never enough or the right classes available when you need them.”

“There is a minimum amount of classes we need to take a semester to stay enrolled, so we have to take classes not related to our major,” said senior Lucio Acuna.

“They tell us to value education and get the most we can out of college, but then they are wanting to penalize us if we take anything other than our major,” said Acuna referring to certain restrictions that might be imposed on students in the future.

By STEPHANIE TAYLOR

The journalist within is calling you. Answer by applying at The Beacon.

Visit GC 210 or WUC 124 for an application.

The Miami Herald
tiki hut makers to add a bit of laid-back island life to their back yards. But true tikiphiles like Kern Mattei, manager of the Mai Kai, have taken the tiki look inside the house.

The half-Tahitian Mattei comes by his love of everything tiki naturally. His mom was a Mai-Kai dancer and his dad was the former general manager. Mattei, who was born in 1966, grew up playing island life to their back yards. But true tikiphiles like Kern Mattei, manager of the Mai Kai, have taken the tiki look inside the house.

The half-Tahitian Mattei comes by his love of everything tiki naturally. His mom was a Mai-Kai dancer and his dad was the former general manager. Mattei, who was born in 1966, grew up playing the Polynesian restaurant.

"I used to climb up on the rocks and stand on the tikis," he says. "The Mai-Kai was like home to me."

"It's no surprise that Mattei would feel good," Mattei says, noting it's a feeling you get when things in the world are as difficult at home as they are now, we dream about an earlier, simpler time. Tiki reminds us of cocktails and hammocks, carving out peacefulness and no stress."

"IT'S AN ESCAPISM"

Even some of the folks who bought into the tiki trend a few years ago are surprised by its popularity. Kerry Colburn, executive editor of the gift division of Chronicle Books, says the publisher came out with its first "Hula Honeys" product in spring 2001.

"It really sort of surprised us," she said. "We thought it was a great collection, but it wasn't tied to a book or a program. The response was so strong. Now we have several 'Hula Honeys' products and more are on the way."

She attributes this boom in Polynesian Pop to old-fashioned escapism.

"When things in the world are as difficult at home as they are now, we dream about an earlier, simpler time. Tiki reminds us of cocktails and hammocks, carving out peacefulness and no stress."

"RELAXED FORMALITY"

The tiki trend has spread from small town America to urban sophisticates. Mark Mayfield, editor in chief of House Beautiful magazine, says he's been to two or three luaus recently in Westchester County, the New York suburb where he lives.

Guests swirled tropical drinks with umbrellas, danced the limbo and listened to Polynesian music. Children wore grass skirts.

Why now? Mayfield says after 9/11 people cut back on travel and they wanted a casual, relaxed atmosphere at home.

"It's a relaxed formality that combines a vacation home with their main home," he says. "All that translates into a lifestyle that looks like you are off to the islands. It's a nostalgia thing, a vacation-at-home thing and an off-the-wall stress reliever."

"SERVING "TIKIPHILES"

For some South Floridians, Polynesian Pop never died. They get their fix going to see the Islanders Revue at the Mai-Kai, which has been operating since 1956, and take home tikis and hula lamps from the gift shop. Last year, nearly 500 self-proclaimed "tikiphiles" came to the Oakland Park, Fla., restaurant for their "tikiphiles" came to the Oakland Park, Fla., restaurant for their first occasion Dating back to their first album and even introduced new material.

They slowed it down a bit with "Satellite," as the night sky, dark over our heads, finally ceased the downpour of rain. All was quiet but the soothing melody of that entrancing song.

As I stood there on the vast lawn, watching Matthews’ face on the big screen, I could see the power of his music in the strain of his neck, his voice and the surrender of his eyes. The somber mood balanced the up-tempo rhythm. Another compelling song was "Ains Marching." The grooves are full of Run-DMC influence and feature a great solo performance by Boyd Tinsley on the violin. The variety of influences that each band member brings to the table is apparent in every individual song.

The audience was led to believe that "Everyday" was last on the list, a song made in the wake of a national tragedy, a song that hoped to bring a message of love and peace.

However, the crowd-pleasers didn’t leave without playing a few more songs. As the strums on Matthews’ guitar played the start of "Warehouse," the crowd became more than just onlookers but part of the band, displaying a remarkable interaction that led to their usual jam session.

The band is presumably, working on a new studio album, which provided for the three new songs on the set list that night.

The first was "Joy Ride" followed by "Crazy Easy" and then "Hello Again." The new material was full of more insightful lyrics, more power-pumped instrumentals and more tightly notched soundtracks.

Their type of music is influenced by country, rock, blues, African music and jazz. They provide a fresh new sound each time. No simple notes or beats here.

DMB will continue their 2004 tour as they perform throughout the country until October.

Matthews concert awes SoFla crowd

By GLADYS AMADOR
Contributing Writer

On July 31, Dave Matthews Band journeyed into Florida, stopping at the Sound Advice Amphitheatre, to give one of the most alluring, heart-pumping, mouth-wide-open shows DMB fans have ever seen. Composed of a South African singer/songwriter, two professional jazz musicians, an old-school violinist and a musical genius, this unique group is as eclectic as the music they compose. Their beats, lyrics, and overall sound never cease to amaze the thousands of fans that go out to watch these mind-blowing concerts. The band played an array of songs dating back to their first album and even introduced new material.

"It's no surprise that Mattei would feel good," Mattei says, noting it's a feeling you get when things in the world are as difficult at home as they are now, we dream about an earlier, simpler time. Tiki reminds us of cocktails and hammocks, carving out peacefulness and no stress."

"RELAXED FORMALITY"

The tiki trend has spread from small town America to urban sophisticates. Mark Mayfield, editor in chief of House Beautiful magazine, says he's been to two or three luaus recently in Westchester County, the New York suburb where he lives. Guests swirled tropical drinks with umbrellas, danced the limbo and listened to Polynesian music. Children wore grass skirts.

Why now? Mayfield says after 9/11 people cut back on travel and they wanted a casual, relaxed atmosphere at home.

"It's a relaxed formality that combines a vacation home with their main home," he says. "All that translates into a lifestyle that looks like you are off to the islands. It's a nostalgia thing, a vacation-at-home thing and an off-the-wall stress reliever."

Even some of the folks who bought into the tiki trend a few years ago are surprised by its popularity. Kerry Colburn, executive editor of the gift division of Chronicle Books, says the publisher came out with its first "Hula Honeys" product in spring 2001.

"It really sort of surprised us," she said. "We thought it was a great collection, but it wasn't tied to a book or a program. The response was so strong. Now we have several 'Hula Honeys' products and more are on the way."

She attributes this boom in Polynesian Pop to old-fashioned escapism.

"When things in the world are as difficult at home as they are now, we dream about an earlier, simpler time. Tiki reminds us of cocktails and hammocks, carving out peacefulness and no stress."

"SERVING "TIKIPHILES"

For some South Floridians, Polynesian Pop never died. They get their fix going to see the Islanders Revue at the Mai-Kai, which has been operating since 1956, and take home tikis and hula lamps from the gift shop. Last year, nearly 500 self-proclaimed "tikiphiles" came to the Oakland Park, Fla., restaurant for their first occasion. "tikiphiles" came to the Oakland Park, Fla., restaurant for their first occasion.
A homecoming to New Jersey is filled with signs and wonders in “Garden State,” a gently comic debut feature from Zach Braff of TV’s “Scrubs.”

Braff wrote and directed the film, and stars as the emotionally frozen Andrew Largeman. His thaw begins when he comes home for his mother’s funeral after nine years in L.A. trying to get an acting career going.

Andrew, or “Large,” as he is called, has been on lithium since he was 9, so his deep-freeze is both real and metaphoric.

The high-school buddies he left behind include a couple of gravediggers (including the comically excellent Peter Sarsgaard), a kid who struck it rich with a patent for “silent” Velcro — and has been twiddling his thumbs ever since — and a guy clanging around in armor for his job at a theme restaurant.

The old gang is all on drugs of one kind or another, most likely to mask the banality of their lives and their lack of initiative. But Andrew is so drugged already by prescription that his use of recreational drugs just leaves him more alienated.

And yet, Braff isn’t closing his home state. New Jersey comes off rather affectionately as a strange but somehow fitting place to stake a claim.

The chief clue is that the old neighborhood also yields up Sam (Natalie Portman), a quirky, kooky sweetheart who helps pull Andrew out of the ether.

Ian Holm plays Andrew’s dad, a shrink with the bad judgment of having taken his son as a patient. With all the deadpan, off-kilter humor and a protagonist who is comically adrift, there are inevitable echoes of “The Graduate.” Lithium here provides the insulation that Benjamin Bradock’s swimming pool did in the 1967 film.

But the closest analogy to “Garden State” is Eric Mendelsohn’s “Jud Berlin” (1999), another movie with a serenely weird view of an actor’s homecoming (in that case, to Babylon, Long Island).

“Garden State,” a hit at the Sundance festival, sometimes veers off into preciosity. But it offers something rare in the bond between Andrew and Sam. Their connection follows a believable arc from their first awkward encounter to a specific, believable intimacy, without which the movie’s joikiness could have rung hollow.

BRAF!

Video game releases return from ‘80s

By VICTOR GODINEZ
The Dallas Morning News

After spending a large chunk of my Sunday afternoon on the couch gorging on VH1’s “I Love the 80s” show, it seemed appropriate to romp through some newly released collections of ’80s video games.

But nostalgia is a dish best served in small portions. These retro releases are encoded in vintage-style controller casings, so you don’t need a separate console to play. Just unplug the controller, insert four AA batteries and plug the controller into your TV.

I tested the “Ms. Pac-Man” stick, “Classic Arcade Pinball” controller and Atari Paddle from JAKKS Pacific Inc. and the Intellivision 10 Video Game System from Techno Source.

Each system has several games hard-wired into its guts, but quantity doesn’t always equal quality.

Still, each system has at least one decent title that should entertain you for more than 30 seconds.

The highlight of the “Ms. Pac-Man” stick ($20), of course, is the little yellow lady herself, and she chomps pellets and ghosts with a satisfying electronic crunch.

Space shooter “Galaga” is also a pleasant inclusion on the system and illustrates how the industry was already evolving beyond the simple mechanics of “Space Invaders.”

“Xevious,” “Mappy” and “Pole Position” are also included. I couldn’t get my car to turn at all in “Pole Position,” even though the controller seemed to work fine on the other games.

The “Classic Arcade Pinball” controller ($20) is exactly what it sounds like — three pinball tables loaded into the circuits of a standard controller. One cool innovation: The controller has a built-in mechanical plunger that you have to pull to release the ball.

The Atari Paddle ($20) was the biggest disappointment of the bunch. Although it has 13 games built in and even comes with two controllers for multiplayer fun, it doesn’t have the essential paddle title, “Kaboom!” “Breakout” and “Super Breakout” are OK, but I want my water buckets and insane bomb thrower.

Finally, the Intellivision system ($13) has a library of 10 hit-or-miss games.

“Astromash,” “Football” and “Baseball” are dandy. But “Sking,” where you guide a stick man down a monetuous mountainside, and “Shark! Shark!,” in which you are a fish eating smaller fish to turn yourself into a big fish, will make your brain rot.

You do have to award moxy points for “Space Armada,” an astoundingly shameless but amusing rip-off of “Space Invaders.”

Note: A $20 Intellivision controller is also available with 25 built-in games. All these systems have their moments and would make great gift for any long-time gamer over age 25.

Although it’s hip to denigrate modern video games as shallow eye candy, these systems show just how far the industry has come.

Microsoft has started showing a preview for “Halo 2” in theaters, and you can watch the trailer online here: www.fileplanet.com/files/140000/143466.shtml.

It’s impressive, but a quirky marketing campaign seems to luck beneath the pyrotechnics. At the end of the trailer, the www.xbox.com tagline briefly switches to “Ilovebees.com.” Go to that site, and a seemingly innocuous hommage to bees pops up. But the page starts doing weird things, and there’s a timer counting down to Aug. 24. “Halo 2” is slated for release Nov. 9, so that ain’t it.

There’s already a message board at forums.unfiction.com/forums/index.php?c=15 devoted to the ilovebees mystery.
What Do You Think?

Do you think there will be terrorist activities to affect the Olympics?

- Considering the size of the event and some already occurring threats, I’d say definitely.
  - 16%
- Even with the buzz about threats, I don’t think anything really dangerous will occur as long as security is on its toes.
  - 50%
- Nah, terrorists don’t care about games, it’s the presidential election they’re waiting for.
  - 28%
- Who cares? The Olympics suck. And anyway, I’m not in Athens so why should I worry?
  - 0%

Total participants: 25
Cast your vote at www.beaconnewspaper.com

---

Winner & Loser

Winner

Dave Chappelle: The popular comedian was recently granted an estimated $50 million contract renewal for two seasons. Meanwhile, Rick James, who’s parody is perhaps the most well-known of Chappelle’s skits, recently died at 56.

Loser

Ricky Williams: The retired Dolphins running back recently told Sports Illustrated he would “love” to rejoin the NFL through the Oakland Raiders. Williams said only California’s “crazy fans” would accept a “weirdo.”

---

Quoteables

“Fame is addictive. Money is addictive. Attention is addictive. But golf is second to none.”

— Bill Cosby, Actor, speaking at the Rainbow/PUSH coalition and Citizenship Education Fund’s conference.

“You can say I’m a bitter, but I would argue that I am a lover. I’m a lover of traditional families and children, who deserve the right to have a mother and a father.”

— Senator Rick Santorum, promoting a constitutional amendment banning gay marriage.

“Fame is addictive. Money is addictive. Attention is addictive. But golf is second to none.”

— Marc Anthony, Singer/Songwriter, after purchasing a $22,000 set of Honma brand golf clubs from Japan.

“He was right that Dick Cheney was ready to take over on Day One. And he did, and he has ever since.”

— Senator John Kerry, Democratic presidential candidate, responding to a comment by President Bush at a campaign rally.

---

Send Us Your Letters

Letters to the Editor must be dropped off in GC 210 at the University Park campus, WUC 124 at the Biscayne Bay Campus or sent to beacon@fiu.edu. Letters must include the writer’s full name, year in school, major/department and a valid phone number for verification purposes. If brought in to an office, a legitimate ID may be accepted instead of a phone number. The Beacon reserves the right to edit letters for clarity and/or spacing constraints. Letters must adhere to a maximum of 400 words.

---

Who knew trendspotting could be so painstaking?

By LENORE SKENAZY

New York Daily News

Tongue studs.

I really missed the boat on that one. I just couldn’t imagine swarms of kids demanding more metal in their mouths, considering most of them had just gotten out of braces.

But, as those with tongue studs say: I wrath wrong. And by now I have been wrong so many, many times (“Sushi? Who’s gonna eat raw fish?” “Why are they putting music on TV?” “Since when do guys go for lesbians?”) that perhaps my old boss was right to fire me from my position as, yes, trend spotter.

Like, OK, once I was sent to interview the as-yet-unsigned Beastie Boys. I returned and announced, “Sorry — those guys aren’t going anywhere.”

Except, of course, to the top of the charts.

In my defense, they only stayed there for two decades.

Something similar happened with the Blue Man Group, for whom I predicted a quick Off-Broadway death. Manhattan rents? “I’m sure they’ll come down soon!” And, of course, bottled water: “Who’s gonna pay for something they can get free?”

---

Phew! [FIU]

Some professors should consider a career in stand-up

By Luis Nin

---

Alejandro Diaz Editor In Chief • John Lovell Managing Editor • Felicidad Garcia Opinion Editor
Electrifying players give Team USA gold medal

YouNgb, from page 8

An embarrassment, I see it as a learning experience. The following night, the team played Germany as if the game was a championship. The players played fearlessly and determined as if the loss the night before was a wake-up call.

Team USA defeated Germany on a Hail Mary, three-point shot with only a second left. As Allen Iverson shot nothing but net, the players gathered around him jumping in excitement.

This is just an exhibition game but the players enjoyed the win, played their heart out on the court and celebrated a victory. It doesn’t matter if you win in an exhibition game or a championship game, a win is a win, and that’s what Team USA enjoyed.

Watching the players celebrate almost felt as if you were watching Rocky IV. These players may not be the best the US has to offer, but they want to be there. In history, some of the best teams have not always won.

Last year the Marlings defeated the Yankees in an unforgettable underdog story. The Lakers were defeated by the Pistons, when the Lakers had four future Hall of Famers in their starting lineup.

Another point people don’t realize include the fact that the competition since the original Dream Team has stepped up. European teams are considered to have some of the best shooters in the Olympics.

With a young team full of electrifying players, expect Team USA to bring a gold medal this season. Hey, that’s what Anthony guaranteed, now isn’t that exciting?

Team USA not good enough for gold medal

Nightmare, from page 8

Decided, because of security issues, prior engagements or a general lack of interest, that they would not represent Team USA.

Just think of what a starting five consisting of Shaq, Garnett, Paul Pierce, McGrady, and Jason Kidd would do to the current Team USA in a game.

Some listed the threat of terrorism as a deterrent from Athens; others had summer weddings to attend. What’s the real reason most stars declined their invitations? Money. Players do not get paid to represent their country.

The team’s shortcomings are Shaq-sized and neon pink, in other words, you can’t miss them. Yes, youth and inexperience are obstacles. Great coaching, however, can compensate for that and future Hall of Fame Coach Larry Brown carries it in truck loads. The things you can’t coach around are the lack of size, true point guards and pure shooters.

The team lacks a real distributor of the ball. Iverson is more of a scoring point guard, Dwayne Wade is probably better suited as a shooting guard and Stephon Marbury shouldn’t even be on this team.

None of the NBA’s top 10 three point shooters are on the team either. Tim Duncan is the only member of Team USA to rank top ten in points per game last year and he was a center and focal point of the Spurs offense.

Perhaps it’s the ‘Dream Team’ mentality itself that’s hurting USA Basketball. It’s plausible that after failing to acquire top-shelf NBA stars, given America’s fascination with big names, the criterion for invitations deviated from filling team needs to selling team jerseys.

No one will argue that this team, under the leadership of Duncan and coaching of Brown, is not good. The raw talent is there, but they might not be good enough for gold.

Handy: “I want to get All-American along with All-Conference honors”

Handy, from page 8

The 6-foot-2-inch defender has been consistent year after year. During his sophomore year, he started in eighteen games, scored the Golden Panther’s first goal of the season against Cal State Fullerton and was honored as The Atlantic Soccer Conference Player of the Week on Oct. 20, 2002. As a freshman, Handy started in seventeen games finishing with one goal, two assists and four points.

Playing soccer since he was nine years old, Allen is awaiting the day he can finally show off his collegiate experience to his family.

“I hope my family can come out and see me play this year,” said Handy who is excited to get the season started.

Handy, a sports management major, is indeed a very talented athlete, but he also has excelled greatly in school. Handy was appointed to the Honor Roll just last spring and is in tune with his future opportunities.

“Academically, I just want to graduate,” said Handy. After a successful season the team had last year, making it to the NCAA, Handy is hopeful Coach Karl Kremser will be happy with their start.

“Coach just wants everybody to come back in shape,” said Handy, “We have to organize a lot better defensively.”

During the off-season, Handy knows he has to focus his time on his game and how he can keep improving it.

“A lot of players are in club leagues, but I’ve just been working out on campus,” said Handy who works out with his Golden Panther teammates.

Staying patient while preparing for the season is the normal routine these days for Handy and his teammates.

He is gathering his thoughts for their upcoming opponents, as well as the new comers to the team.

“We mold them as they come,” said Handy, who believes the team is real close to being put together.

Getting to the final four this season, along with staying in shape, are goals for Handy. Ready to work hard and ready for the excitement, Handy keeps his expectations raised for his newly polished team.

“I want to get All-American, along with All-Conference honors,” said Handy.

Sports Writers Needed!

The Beacon is hiring dedicated individuals. For more information contact Sports Editor Harry Coleman at hcole001@fiu.edu or stop by GC 210 or WUC 124 for an application.
Is the USA Dream Team in trouble at Athens?

Young players that want to be there will bring gold

By HARRY COLEMAN
Sports Editor

Young, energetic, passionate and full of heart. That's what this year's USA men's basketball team is.

The team consists of players who want to play basketball, who love every single aspect of the game. They are not in it for the money or fame, but for the chance to bring the United States a gold medal.

The best players: Shaquille O'Neal, Kevin Garnett, Tracy McGrady and Jason Kidd all declined invitations to the team due to injuries, security concerns or other reasons. The last team, mentioned above are. But, it also signifies players that want to be there and represent the red, white and blue.

The first Dream Team consisted of Jordan, Bird and Magic, quite possibly three of the greatest players of all time, but also players who were proud to represent their country and played with heart. While the players on today's team may not be the best, they are the ones who never hesitated in saying, "No" to joining Coach Larry Brown and the team on the trip to Athens.

Carmelo Anthony was mad because he was one of the last players picked. Lamar Odom, who was picked after Anthony, said prior to being selected that it would be an honor if the USA Basketball Committee elected him to represent the USA. Dwayne Wade said that being asked to join the Dream Team was the greatest honor he had ever received.

The average age on the team is almost 26.5 years young, which adds excitement to the team. Rookie sensation, King LeBron James is also on the team, which puts the top-three rookie-of-the-year-vote getters together on the same team.

The Dream Team lost an exhibition to Italy that stunned the world and left the players embarrassed. While this may look like an embarrassment, it also signifies players that look on the obviously inferior rest of the world as good as it gets. A handful of some of the best players in the history of the game taking on the obviously inferior rest of the world is the stuff of dreams. What USA basketball is putting on the court in search of Olympic gold this year is a whole lot closer to a nightmare.

International competition is not what it used to be. While American kids have grown up perfecting crossovers and no-look passes, the rest of the world has been learning the sport from the ground up. This is why European 7-footers have a perimeter jump shot and more international players go earlier in the draft each year.

Don't get me wrong. The best ball in the world is still played in the birthplace of the sport, but the attention to fundamentals in the global game has helped the world catch up and the USA has to field its best players to collect jewelry in the Olympics.

First, let's keep in mind that this is the youngest and least experienced team to represent the USA since NBA players entered the Olympics in 1992. The average age of this squad, which features Allen Iverson and Tim Duncan as its oldest players, is just above 23 years old. Out of the 12-man roster, five players have played 82 or fewer regular season games in the NBA.

Team USA is so young that Emeka Okafor, Coach Larry Brown's final selection and the second overall pick in this year's NBA draft, has yet to start his first professional basketball game and isn't legally allowed to buy alcohol until September.

No one is pretending that this is USA's crème-de-la-crème. The skills and experience of world class players like Shaquille O'Neal, Kobe Bryant, Tracy McGrady, Kevin Garnett and Jermaine O'Neal were painfully missed in these exhibition games. Those players

Handy player on defense

By NATALIE SABIA
Staff Writer

Positioned as the last line of defense, anxiously awaiting the forwards who will soon be running in full force towards him, co-captain Allen Handy is not only ready to defend his home goal, but is ready to attack.

After starting in all twenty-two games last year and ringing in four goals and assists, Allen’s performance placed him number sixth on the team with a total of ten points. Handy scored his first goal of the season during a 5-1 victory against San Francisco last year. During the season, he helped improve the Golden Panther’s defense to a 1.06 goals-against average. Entering his senior year, Handy has been a huge success to the men’s soccer team since his first appearance as a freshman in 2001 and will be closely watched this year as co-captain of the team.

After reaching the NCAA tournament last year, Handy expects a lot from himself and his teammates in what he hopes is another successful season.

“Everybody knows what is expected of them. Things are good right now, we are all comfortable with each other,” said Handy who wants the team go reach the Final Four. Leaving Texas four years ago for an opportunity to strengthen his ability in Miami was not very challenging for the 21-year-old, considering everything the city has to offer.

“One knew FIU had great tradition here and the weather played a big factor in my decision,” said Handy.

CO-CAPTAIN: Allen Handy plans to help team reach the Final Four in his final year. COURTESY PHOTO

HEAT TALENTE: Dwyane Wade is part of the rookie trio that includes LeBron James and Carmelo Anthony. Wade said joining Team USA was an honor. COURTESY PHOTO

By ANDRES CORDERO
Staff Writer

The Dream Team was as good as it gets. A handful of some of the best players in the history of the game taking on the obviously inferior rest of the world is the stuff of dreams. What USA basketball is putting on the court in search of Olympic gold this year is a whole lot closer to a nightmare.

International competition is not what it used to be. While American kids have grown up perfecting crossovers and no-look passes, the rest of the world has been learning the sport from the ground up. This is why European 7-footers have a perimeter jump shot and more international players go earlier in the draft each year.

Don’t get me wrong. The best ball in the world is still played in the birthplace of the sport, but the attention to fundamentals in the global game has helped the world catch up and the USA has to field some of its best if it wants to collect jewelry in the Olympics.

First, let’s keep in mind that this is the youngest and least experienced team to represent the USA since NBA players entered the Olympics in 1992. The average age of this squad, which features Allen Iverson and Tim Duncan as its oldest players, is just above 23 years old. Out of the 12-man roster, five players have played 82 or fewer regular season games in the NBA.

Team USA is so young that Emeka Okafor, Coach Larry Brown’s final selection and the second overall pick in this year’s NBA draft, has yet to start his first professional basketball game and isn’t legally allowed to buy alcohol until September.

No one is pretending that this is USA’s crème-de-la-crème. The skills and experience of world class players like Shaquille O’Neal, Kobe Bryant, Tracy McGrady, Kevin Garnett and Jermaine O’Neal were painfully missed in these exhibition games. Those players

See NIGHTMARE, page 7

See YOUNG, page 7

By NADALIE SABIA
Staff Writer

Positioned as the last line of defense, anxiously awaiting the forwards who will soon be running in full force towards him, co-captain Allen Handy is not only ready to defend his home goal, but is ready to attack.

After starting in all twenty-two games last year and ringing in four goals and assists, Allen’s performance placed him number sixth on the team with a total of ten points. Handy scored his first goal of the season during a 5-1 victory against San Francisco last year. During the season, he helped improve the Golden Panther’s defense to a 1.06 goals-against average. Entering his senior year, Handy has been a huge success to the men’s soccer team since his first appearance as a freshman in 2001 and will be closely watched this year as co-captain of the team.

After reaching the NCAA tournament last year, Handy expects a lot from himself and his teammates in what he hopes is another successful season.

“Everybody knows what is expected of them. Things are good right now, we are all comfortable with each other,” said Handy who wants the team go reach the Final Four. Leaving Texas four years ago for an opportunity to strengthen his ability in Miami was not very challenging for the 21-year-old, considering everything the city has to offer.

“One knew FIU had great tradition here and the weather played a big factor in my decision,” said Handy.