Kerry Sanders (b. 1960) has been NBC's Miami-based reporter since 1996. Sanders was born in Lima, Peru to a Peruvian American father and American mother. His mother was a radio commentator on Radio del Pacifico in Lima. Sanders grew up along the East Coast, spending most of his early years in Sudbury, Mass. He attended three high schools in Massachusetts, Peru and Orlando. Sanders graduated cum laude (emphasis in journalism) in 1982.

Sanders began his career as a 20-year-old in Lima, Peru. He was a newsreader for Radio del Pacifico. While attending high school in Lima, Sanders learned Spanish, a language that is most helpful in Miami. Sanders worked for five and a half years at WTVT-TV, the CBS affiliate in Tampa. In the early 1980s, Kerry worked at the ABC affiliate in West Palm Beach, Fla. Long afterwards, Sanders spent five years at WTVJ-TV, the NBC-owned station in Miami that has often served as a launching board for reporters destined for national careers. While at WTVJ, Sanders was a regular contributor for Today. His reports included coverage of the Alas Airline crash in the Dominican Republic, the American Airlines Crash in Columbia and the ATF siege of the Branch Davidian compound in Waco, Texas.

Sanders was a war correspondent for NBC during the first Gulf War, traveling with the U.S. Marine Corps. He reported on various battles, including the harsh 11-day conflict in Nasiriyah and the 1991 Persian Gulf War, reporting from Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. Sanders also reported on the 2001 terrorist attack on the USS Cole in Yemen. Sanders has received other numerous national awards. He was honored with the prestigious Columbia-duPont, recognizing for his reporting from Haiti as a military coup rocked the nation's fourth most populous state. Before settling in Miami, he covered major hurricanes. He was a member of the NBC News team that won the Edward R. Murrow Award. Sanders was also one of NBC's embedded reporters during the Iraq war, traveling with the U.S. Marine Corps. He reported on the 2004 tsunami, the 2005 Katrina hurricane, the 2007股权危机, the 2010 earthquake.

Sanders was also a co-recipient of a Peabody Award for coverage of Hurricane Andrew and the aftermath of the storm. He was awarded a 2011 Society of Professional Journalists Bronze Medal for his coverage of the 2010 Chilean mining accident that saved 33 Chileans trapped deep in a mine. Sanders was awarded a Professional Journalists Bronze Medal for his coverage of the 2011 earthquake in Haiti's devastated south and throughout Latin America. Sanders contributed to the Academy Award winning movie "Spotlight."
