Board of Governors meet at UP

Medical education topic discussed

By C. JOEL MARINO
Senior Staff Writer

Members of the Florida Board of Governors met with the presidents of the state’s universities at University Park campus on July 20 and 21 to discuss different proposals and educational challenges. Among them was the continuous debate over the establishment of medical schools or new medical programs.

In a round-table discussion conducted by the BOG’s Subcommittee on Medical Education, representatives from the Council for Education Policy Research and Improvement presented a PowerPoint slide show outlining solutions to what they describe as a shortage of doctors in the state of Florida.

Though FIU and the University of Central Florida have hopes of opening their own medical school programs in order to train the needed doctors, the CEPR report stated that the best solution would be “first pursue a policy of creating and expanding medical residency positions in the state.”

“Although we’ve known that increasing the number of doctors in residency training could be the best solution, our problem continues to be the finances,” said Bernard Machen, president of University of Florida. “If we have those residencies we can bring the doctors, but who will fund us?”

Federal allocations for new residencies have been inactive since 1997 and have prohibited the expansion of the programs in places like the University of Florida and the University of South Florida. It currently takes $100,000 to support one resident student, most of which is spent on sky-rocketing malpractice insurance fees.

“If we don’t deal with the problem surrounding residencies, we’ll be spending an exorbitant amount of money on opening these new programs and teaching students that will just end up leaving the state,” said BOG Chair Gerri Moll.

See BOG, page 2

Oleta Park renovations attract students

By YAHNILET COLON
Copy Editor

Tucked away in the North Miami metropolitan area and a five-minute drive from the Biscayne Bay Campus is the Oleta River State Park, the largest urban park in the state of Florida, and future site of the Blue Marlin Fish House & Wilderness Experience.

A recreation of the 1930s trading post, the personnel file also indicates that after his second arrest, the university learned that he had also been accused of domestic violence while he was with the Marine Corps before joining the FIU police department. Currie is still currently under employment at the university.

“With him being charged, nothing actually changes. He remains on administrative leave with pay pending an investigation,” said Director of Media Relations Mark Riordan. “We cannot begin our judicial processes.”

FIU was forced to reinstate Currie both times he was fired after an independent arbitrator reviewed his cases. He is part of The Police Benevolent Association — the union he used to appeal his cases.

“We believe we spoke clearly by firing him twice,” Riordan said.

“Although we’ve known that increasing the number of doctors in residency training could be the best solution, our problem continues to be the finances,” said Bernard Machen, president of University of Florida. “If we have those residencies we can bring the doctors, but who will fund us?”

“With him being charged, nothing actually changes. He remains on administrative leave with pay,” said Director of Media Relations Mark Riordan. “We cannot begin our judicial processes.”

See OLETA, page 2

Officer Currie arrested for sexual assault

By HARRY COLEMAN
Editor in Chief

Miami-Dade Police arrested FIU police officer Frederick Currie on July 20 and charged him with sexually assaulting an 18-year-old woman, officials said.

The arrest occurred 12 days after Currie was placed on administrative leave with pay pending an investigation.

The incident took place around 2 a.m. on July 8 when the on-duty Currie approached a seemingly suspicious vehicle on the grounds of Tamiami Park.

According to Miami-Dade Police spokesperson Nelda Fonticiella, Currie approached the vehicle and saw a woman and her boyfriend inside the car. He ordered the woman out of the vehicle and sexually assaulted her.

The victim was not an FIU student.

Currie, 35, is being charged with one count of sexual battery and one count of battery. As of July 22, Currie was still being detained at Turner Guilford Knight Correctional Center on a $500,000 bond.

This brush with the law is not the first for Currie. Personnel records obtained by The Beacon indicate that Currie has twice been fired from FIU, reprimanded once, repeatedly suspended or relieved of duty and arrested three times on domestic violence charges off-campus while working for the university.

The personnel file also indicates that after his second arrest, the university learned that he had also been accused of domestic violence while he was with the Marine Corps before joining the FIU police department.

“We believe we spoke clearly by firing him twice,” Riordan said.

On a $500,000 bond.

By YAHNILET COLON
Copy Editor

Tucked away in the North Miami metropolitan area and a five-minute drive from the Biscayne Bay Campus is the Oleta River State Park, the largest urban park in the state of Florida, and future site of the Blue Marlin Fish House & Wilderness Experience.

A recreation of the 1930s trading post, the personnel file also indicates that after his second arrest, the university learned that he had also been accused of domestic violence while he was with the Marine Corps before joining the FIU police department. Currie is still currently under employment at the university.

“With him being charged, nothing actually changes. He remains on administrative leave with pay,” said Director of Media Relations Mark Riordan. “We cannot begin our judicial processes.”

FIU was forced to reinstate Currie both times he was fired after an independent arbitrator reviewed his cases. He is part of The Police Benevolent Association — the union he used to appeal his cases.

“We believe we spoke clearly by firing him twice,” Riordan said.

See OLETA, page 2

Officer Currie arrested for sexual assault

By HARRY COLEMAN
Editor in Chief

Miami-Dade Police arrested FIU police officer Frederick Currie on July 20 and charged him with sexually assaulting an 18-year-old woman, officials said.

The arrest occurred 12 days after Currie was placed on administrative leave with pay pending an investigation.

The incident took place around 2 a.m. on July 8 when the on-duty Currie approached a seemingly suspicious vehicle on the grounds of Tamiami Park.

According to Miami-Dade Police spokesperson Nelda Fonticiella, Currie approached the vehicle and saw a woman and her boyfriend inside the car. He ordered the woman out of the vehicle and sexually assaulted her.

The victim was not an FIU student.

Currie, 35, is being charged with one count of sexual battery and one count of battery. As of July 22, Currie was still being detained at Turner Guilford Knight Correctional Center on a $500,000 bond.

This brush with the law is not the first for Currie. Personnel records obtained by The Beacon indicate that Currie has twice been fired from FIU, reprimanded once, repeatedly suspended or relieved of duty and arrested three times on domestic violence charges off-campus while working for the university.

The personnel file also indicates that after his second arrest, the university learned that he had also been accused of domestic violence while he was with the Marine Corps before joining the FIU police department.

Currie is still currently under employment at the university.

“With him being charged, nothing actually changes. He remains on administrative leave with pay,” said Director of Media Relations Mark Riordan. “We cannot begin our judicial processes.”

FIU was forced to reinstate Currie both times he was fired after an independent arbitrator reviewed his cases. He is part of The Police Benevolent Association — the union he used to appeal his cases.

“We believe we spoke clearly by firing him twice,” Riordan said.
Med school proposal discussed

As the discussion shifted from residencies to the possibility of establishing new medical schools, Sub-committee Co-Chair John Temple allowed FIU President Modesto A. Maidique to present the university's proposals on the subject.

“We’ve been perfecting, improving and working on the medical school proposal,” said Maidique. “I’m ready to present wherever the Chair gives me a meeting date.”

Although Maidique had been scheduled to submit a preliminary proposal to the BOG last November, delays within the meeting forced the date to be moved to Jan. 27. The final proposal day has now been set for Nov. 17 at the University of North Florida. The final decision as to whether FIU will receive approval for the long-awaited medical school will be announced at that time.

UCF will also deliver its final statements on that date.

However, not everyone at the meeting was happy with the attention that the possibility of new medical programs received.

“I thought this meeting was arranged to discuss the necessity of medical schools, not to start turning in proposals,” said Zachariah, a subcommittee co-chair, toward the end of the discussions.

While proposing that the best way to deal with the shortage of doctors would be to expand already existing programs, Zachariah still showed skepticism toward the report and its findings.

“When Florida wants medical schools, they make up a crisis. The crisis is started by you, by people who want medical schools,” he said, causing a slight commotion among those present.

Near the meeting’s conclusion, the members began to address the trouble with funds for residencies once again, assuring that this was the only way to fix the problem.

“We need to be bold, we need to dig in and we need to lobby the right people, both at the state and federal levels for the right funds,” said BOG member Bill McCullum. “That’s the only way.”

Other meetings that took place during the conference included a gathering of the BOG Finance Committee and an assembly of provosts and presidents from the universities in attendance.

The BOG meets at various state campuses throughout the year, usually holding 10 annual conferences. The next meeting will take place in September at UCF.

Fish house new addition to park

The long-awaited medical school proposals, according to the university’s proposals, are aimed at addressing the shortage of doctors and the best way to deal with the shortage of doctors would be to expand already existing programs, Zachariah still showed skepticism toward the report and its findings.

“When Florida wants medical schools, they make up a crisis. The crisis is started by you, by people who want medical schools,” he said, causing a slight commotion among those present.

Near the meeting’s conclusion, the members began to address the trouble with funds for residencies once again, assuring that this was the only way to fix the problem.

“We need to be bold, we need to dig in and we need to lobby the right people, both at the state and federal levels for the right funds,” said BOG member Bill McCullum. “That’s the only way.”

Other meetings that took place during the conference included a gathering of the BOG Finance Committee and an assembly of provosts and presidents from the universities in attendance.

The BOG meets at various state campuses throughout the year, usually holding 10 annual conferences. The next meeting will take place in September at UCF.

Fish house new addition to park

The long-awaited medical school proposals, according to the university’s proposals, are aimed at addressing the shortage of doctors and the best way to deal with the shortage of doctors would be to expand already existing programs, Zachariah still showed skepticism toward the report and its findings.

“When Florida wants medical schools, they make up a crisis. The crisis is started by you, by people who want medical schools,” he said, causing a slight commotion among those present.

Near the meeting’s conclusion, the members began to address the trouble with funds for residencies once again, assuring that this was the only way to fix the problem.

“We need to be bold, we need to dig in and we need to lobby the right people, both at the state and federal levels for the right funds,” said BOG member Bill McCullum. “That’s the only way.”

Other meetings that took place during the conference included a gathering of the BOG Finance Committee and an assembly of provosts and presidents from the universities in attendance.

The BOG meets at various state campuses throughout the year, usually holding 10 annual conferences. The next meeting will take place in September at UCF.

Fish house new addition to park

The long-awaited medical school proposals, according to the university’s proposals, are aimed at addressing the shortage of doctors and the best way to deal with the shortage of doctors would be to expand already existing programs, Zachariah still showed skepticism toward the report and its findings.

“When Florida wants medical schools, they make up a crisis. The crisis is started by you, by people who want medical schools,” he said, causing a slight commotion among those present.

Near the meeting’s conclusion, the members began to address the trouble with funds for residencies once again, assuring that this was the only way to fix the problem.

“We need to be bold, we need to dig in and we need to lobby the right people, both at the state and federal levels for the right funds,” said BOG member Bill McCullum. “That’s the only way.”

Other meetings that took place during the conference included a gathering of the BOG Finance Committee and an assembly of provosts and presidents from the universities in attendance.

The BOG meets at various state campuses throughout the year, usually holding 10 annual conferences. The next meeting will take place in September at UCF.
Plame scandal shakes the White House

It should be noted that Plame was working as an analyst in the CIA’s Directorate of Operations counterintelligence division.

The disclosure of a covert government official is a federal crime, which makes Fitzgerald’s findings extremely important. What makes this situation even more dramatic is that it has come to an essential element of the Bush administration. Karl Rove, Rove, a.k.a. “Bush’s Brain,” has been almost singularly responsible for Bush’s 2000 and 2004 victories and recently took the position of deputy chief of staff in the administration. Additionally, he is a personal friend of Bush, whose ties to the president extend back to the 1970s. There is probably no other individual the president holds in higher regard.

Shortly after Fitzgerald’s investigation began, Bush took the initiative to proclaim that if anyone within his administration was responsible for leaking Plame’s identity, that individual would be removed at once. No one forced him to come forward with this statement. It was Bush’s attempt to take a bold, affirmative stance in a criminal investigation. Not surprisingly, since the attention has turned to Rove, Bush has changed his tune. He insisted he would only remove any person indicted, tried and convicted “of a crime” in Plame’s outing. It now appears that putting Plame and America’s interests at danger is not punishable in Bush’s mind. It only matters if you get caught.

Time reporter Matthew Cooper just recently acknowledged that Rove was the secret source who informed him that Wilson’s wife worked for the CIA. In an email to Michael Duffy, Time bureau chief, Cooper wrote, “[I] spoke to Rove on double super secret background for about two minutes.” He went on to write: “It was … Wilson’s wife, who apparently works at the agency on weapons of mass destruction issues, who authorized the trip.”

Whichever way you look at it, that my friends, is a leak. Although most Republicans insist no law was broken because Rove did not mention Plame by name, it doesn’t take a government official to do a little searching to find that Wilson is married to Valerie Plame. Anyone could find that information through the Internet now-a-days. Although I hardly ever find myself agreeing with Bush, I must say I wholeheartedly agree with former President Bush’s aforementioned comment. In fact, I also agree with former Republican Party Chairman Ed Gillespie. On September 30, 2003, he stated that the revealing of Plame’s identity is “absurdent and it should be a crime.” Asked by Hardball’s Chris Matthews if it would be worse than Watergate, he answered, “Yeah, in terms of the real world implications of it.”

These men seemed to understand the danger an undercover agent faces, should the agents identity be disclosed – not to mention the damage done to U.S. interests. Unfortunately it seems that the Bush administration cannot come to the same conclusion. The man who swore to always bring justice and integrity into the Oval Office is a cheap shot at former President Bill Clinton) is now failing to not only bring terrorists to justice, but to bring those within his own administration to justice, for how is that supposed to make us safe? We know Osama Bin Laden is responsible for 9/11 and we do not know Karl Rove directly threatened a CIA agent and American national security, and neither has faced any justice from this administration.

By JAMES VALLE
Staff Writer

“I have nothing but contempt and anger for those who betray the trust by exposing the name of our sources. They are, in my view, the most insidious of traitors.” — Former President George H.W. Bush, April 26, 1999.

Unless you live under a rock, surely you have heard about the jailing of New York Times columnist Judith Miller for her refusal to reveal her White House sources to federal prosecutor Patrick Fitzgerald. Fitzgerald has been investigating the leak of former undercover CIA agent Valerie Plame for the past two years. For those unfamiliar with the case, a quick summary: In an attempt to validate a State of the Union claim that Iraq sought to obtain yellowcake uranium from Niger, the White House sent former ambassador Joseph Wilson to Africa to investigate the claim.

In a New York Times article, Wilson essentially disclaimed the claim and embarrassed the Bush administration. Shortly thereafter, columnist Robert Novak suggested that Plame may have gotten her husband, Wilson, the assignment, thereby questioning the truthfulness of Wilson’s findings. The Novak article, written in July 2003, is the chief culprit in revealing Plame’s identity to the public.

We know Osama Bin Laden is responsible for 9/11 and we know Karl Rove directly threatened a CIA agent and American national security, and neither has faced any justice from this administration.

Lesser & Greater

The victim: The woman who officer Frederick Currie was charged of sexually assaulting has demonstrated what being a courageous woman is all about. Instead of cowering behind fear of accusing a cop, she did the right thing. To you: Thank you. You have been an inspiration to women everywhere.

The Police Benevolent Association: The union who aided Currie through the appellate process in the past. You have twice reinstated a man with a rather “rare record.” Not only has he been charged with sexual assault but has also been accused of domestic violence several times. Thank you for showing how our safety is a concern for you.

Nicole Stratten
Graduate Student

We know Osama Bin Laden is responsible for 9/11 and we know Karl Rove directly threatened a CIA agent and American national security, and neither has faced any justice from this administration.

The policy: The police officers, who are now facing sexual assault charges. The police officer’s sexual assault charges are just another example of how this administration smears all who voice their doubts on its policies.

Make no mistake about it: The leaking of Plame’s identity was politics at its most thug-like. Rove abused the “anonymous source” privilege to enact revenge on a man who rightly called into question the reasoning for the invasion of Iraq. This is just another example of how this administration smears all who voice their doubts on its policies.

Now that the White House has nothing to lose with its parties in this one, Americans receive another opportunity to gauge whether Bush and his administration has a shred of integrity and do what it initially promised to do. Given its track record, there’s a better chance O.J. Simpson will find his ex-wife’s killer before that happens.
In the last edition of The Beacon, the tale of 18-year-old Agustin Barbara’s experiences during fraternity recruitment week was unfolding.

Fraternity Recruitment Week

During fraternity recruitment week started July 11, a week in which fraternal organizations on campus have hopes meeting a great group of new potential members. It also marked the beginning of Barbara’s life as a college student.

In hopes that his experience would somehow clear those misconceptions many have about fraternal organizations and the recruitment process, Barbara recounted what he went through in order to join.

To recap, Part I of his diary began July 11 when he participated in the Greek Barbecue and had the chance to speak to different organizations. This is where our staff writers met the hopeful freshman, enthusiastically speaking to his fraternity of choice: Sigma Phi Epsilon or “Sig Ep.”

July 12 was the official “kick-off” night of each organization’s individual party, but unfortunately, Barbara could not make it. His last night during Part I of his experience was July 13 when he attended the Sig Ep mixer. His “newfound” experience continued as the second half of the week was approaching and potential members grew anxious to discover whether or not they would become members of the fraternity organizations of their choice.

It was July 14, and Barbara attended a barbecue hosted by Sig Ep at a member’s house. It was definitely apparent that the week was coming to an end, as the parties seemed to become more of a one-on-one interaction between brothers and potential members. The barbecue was definitely an opportunity for potential members to mingle a little more.

This was also an event that would give members of these organizations an idea of which potential members were serious about joining, their characteristics and if they would be a great asset to the organization.

During the barbecue, Barbara had the opportunity to meet with more brothers than she had in the past. He also had the opportunity to meet girls from different sororities. The barbecue itself proved to be an essential event for Barbara to promote herself before any member selection within the organization was done. He had fun, but things would get much more interesting later on during the week.

A party to commemorate the final day of recruitment week (July 15) was the last chance for Barbara and others to make a good impression. But this was not the typical setting-to-know-each-other gathering. On this day fraternity held themed social parties where candidates met a variety of different people associated with the Greek system on campus, as well as danced and just cut loose.

That night, Barbara attended the Sig Ep wet-and-wild party called Seuss’ Landin’ with a Dr. Seuss theme, it was held at a member’s house with a mixture of water slides, water balloons and music. The purpose for these parties was to stray away from the seriousness of the week. It was also a chance for potential members to show a little of their fun and relaxed sides.

After a night of conversation, overload and partying, the week finally ended. This was the day all potential members would find out whether or not they had been accepted into their organization of choice.

On July 16 all members awaited a phone call from a brother, either extending them a “bid” to join or an apology for not being selected.

It was a stressful day for Barbara, but after much anticipation, his phone finally rang. He had been extended a bid to join the fraternity week and was most comfortable accepting, his phone finally rang. He had been extended a bid to join the fraternity week and was most comfortable accepting.

On July 17, all potential members that were extended a bid to join Sig Ep met at the Graham Center Ballrooms to officially sign their bid cards. Bid cards are used so that Greek advisors know whether a potential member has accepted a bid from a certain organization.

“When the President of Sigma Phi Epsilon handed me that bid card, I was just really happy,” Barbara said.

Although the recruitment process was long and at times a little stressful, Agustin is glad he went through it. “It was a really good experience and I have no regrets,” Barbara said. “I have made a lot of new friends.”

One only hopes that those hype misconceptions of fraternal organizations portrayed by society can be placed aside in support of Barbara’s experiences.

When it comes down to it, joining a Greek organization seems to be more of a fun rather than a tedious experience.

---

Potter ages and matures in Rowling’s sixth installment of the popular fantasy series

By JENNIFER GALASSO Assistant Opinion Editor

“Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince” is one of the most enthralling books ever written. Readers are once again witnesses to J.K. Rowling’s uncanny ability to keep characters fresh and vivid in our imaginations, despite it being our sixth book reading about them. In the book, we see how clearly Harry, Ron and Hermione, along with the regular gang, have all grown up.

Harry is no longer the brooding angry teenager he was during books four and five. He has come to accept his fate head-on, and takes full responsibility for his actions. Even though he is still fearful at times of what lies ahead in his life and the quests that he must embark on, which is normal given that he is facing You-Know-Who, he valiantly steps to the front line and demands to be kept on the inside at all times. Albus Dumbledore once again makes an influential presence in this book, even though he was absent during most of book five.

Rowling is able to freely make an emotional impact on the reader like never before. There will be sections in which you can’t help but laugh out loud. Simple teenager romance scenes that could easily be seen as silly, come off as endearing. Readers get to join in the fun behind the jealous antics and “snogging” teases that Ron, Hermione, Ginny and Harry provoke among themselves. The twins, Fred and George, provide more tools, or rather enchantments, as entertainment for Hogwarts students. However, like all good things in life, this too must come to an end.

Beyond the happiness and innocence in the book, there is always Lord Voldemort, who is trying his best to rise to power. He creates mystery in the book, as we find out just how he is infiltrating Hogwarts. One of the best parts of this book is that we get to know Tom Riddle before his Lord Voldemort days. Through Dumbledore’s memories we read about the beginnings of the boy who would become the darkest wizard of all time.

Certain questions are still unanswered, the biggest debate being which side is Severus Snape on? Although the answer seems rather clear toward the end of the book, prior events and comments leave a lingering doubt in your mind, leaving no choice but to wait for the final book.

However, it must be said that the end is an extremely sad one. Readers will grieve along with Harry the death of one of the most beloved characters in the books; one who always stood by Harry even if he doubted it at times, and someone whose belief in Harry never, not once, faltered.

“Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince” creates more questions than answers for them.

The characters are thrust into adulthood and it seems that the purpose of book seven will be to show how they deal.

Will their friendship survive? Did he really die? And of course, who will be triumphant in the pending war—Harry Potter Lord Voldemort?
Charlie mixes old-fashioned sweetness with modern-day spice

The entertainment in “Charlie and the Chocolate Factory” is as sensational as the chocolate found in Willy Wonka’s factory. Although Tim Burton’s version of Roald Dahl’s novel, starring Johnny Depp, is not a deliberate remake of the classic 1971 film (directed by Mel Stuart with Gene Wilder as Charlie), it still contains the same delightful storyline while taking a much more exaggerated and hysterical approach.

Charlie Bucket (Freddie Highmore) is a poor boy whose family barely has enough to eat. He lives with his parents (Helena Bonham Carter and Noah Taylor) and four grandparents, including beloved Grandpa Joe (David Kelly). Bucket is a big fan of Willy Wonka, who decides to open the doors to his chocolate factory for the first time in ten years and will allow five people to join him inside for a tour.

Wonka will be distributing five golden tickets in his packaged chocolate throughout the world and those who find the tickets will visit the factory. Customers flock to stores to get their hands on Wonka bars and then chaos erupts. Unfortunately for Charlie, he can only afford to have a bar on his birthday which turns out not to be a winner. But one day, he finds a $10 bill on the street and uses it to buy a bar, winning the opportunity of visiting Wonka’s chocolate factory with his grandfather and four other unworthy winners.

Like the 1971 version, this is where the fun starts, as the film intensifies its already strong sense of whimsical fun, which Burton executes effectively. With computer generated scenes and a real factory set-up, Burton takes a different approach to incorporate the hilarious and sentimental storyline into the picture.

Danny Elfman’s gloomy score enhances the film from the opening credits and throughout the whole film. Although the film’s pace is a bit off more arrogant than in the original, often proclaiming herself a winner and other unworthy winners. Wonka distributes five golden tickets to five children to get a head start, as the film is presented after each misfortune. Flashbacks also provide humorous moments of Wonka’s past, as well as his strained relationship with his father (Christopher Lee). Charlie’s other grandparents, although minor characters, are more fleshed out and funny. However, Charlie’s situation is still the heart of the story that accommodates the silly amusement. This new ride through Willy Wonka’s factory provides audiences with a fresh approach to the classic tale. This contemporary re-telling stirs the heart and tickles the funny bone.

Milk chocolate was invented by Daniel Peter, who sold the concept to his neighbor Henri Nestle.

1. TRAVELING
There’s nothing better than sampling a bit of the world. Even though being on an airplane for more than two hours may be a pain, it’s all worth it when you land in Paris and visit the Eiffel Tower while eating a crepe.

2. BOOKS
I [heart] books. I will literally lock myself up in my room for a whole day and read a book. I know you’re probably saying to yourself, “Nerd alert!” but there’s seriously nothing better than a well-written book. Some of my favorite books are “The Perks of Being a Wallflower” and the “Harry Potter” series. Hooray for reading!

3. “ALIAS”
I am completely addicted to “Alias.” I’m not exactly sure why, but I’m like a crack addict, constantly craving more every time an episode ends. Plus, Michael Vartan is amazingly hot.

4. CELEBRITY JEOPARDY
“The Rapist … no Mr. Connery, that’s Therapist.” I adore Will Ferrell, so what can be better than him impersonating “Jeopardy” host Alex Trebek while Sean Connery insults him with politically incorrect statements?

5. CLAM CHOWDER
It’s delightful. Enough said.
Lineman dreams of title

Q: People don’t know the beating your arms, fingers and legs take during a football game. How does your body feel the day after a game?

Every part of your body hurts after a game and your hands definitely get a beating. Physically, I wear gloves to minimize cuts, I don’t wear gloves in my right hand ‘cause I snap the football and that hand is scared up. By the end of the season, I have pieces of my hand missing.

Q: You were on the university’s dean list last semester. How important is it for you to not only excel on the field but also in the classroom?

It’s the most important to me; football will always be there but that degree will set you up for the rest of your life.

Q: Linemen are typically known to eat massive amounts of food – more than the usual football player. What’s the craziest amount of food you and your teammates have eaten?

The second year I was here, the entire offensive line went to Kings Buffet (Chinese place). We went there around seven and pretty much closed the place down by ourselves. I’ve never seen faces like that of the people that were there. We cleaned the place out.

Q: In high school, you held the record with a leg press of 1,085 pounds. What motivates you to do this kind of weight?

It’s important to me, I just compete against myself. If I don’t hit what I should in the weight room, I get disappointed in myself.

Q: If your house was on fire and you could only go back and get three material things – assuming your family is safe – what would you get?

Probably a photo album, my computer because it has a lot of schoolwork there and some clothes I guess, ’cause I would probably need some.

Q: Would you shed three years of your life for an NCAA title with FIU?

Yes because that’s what I’ve dreamed of since [I was] little. I would do it without a question.

Q: What are the best and worst things of FIU?

The best is probably the diversity the university has. The bad is that the university is not mature for its size. FIU is constructing so much stuff so quickly. The campus looks totally different than when I got here. I can’t imagine the university being able to run everything so fast.

Q: The team travels on a charter plane to every game. What’s the best part of traveling with all your teammates together?

The thing I like best is the focus we have as a team. From the time we are on the bus to the airport, to when we arrive to the city we are going to play at, the mentality is all football.

The worst thing about it, though, is the small seats on the plane. I’m a big guy so the small seats on a long ride are not too good.

MAJOR LEAGUE: Former Golden Panther Brad Eldred was called up to the Pittsburgh Pirates on July 22. From 1999-2002, he hit .338 with 44 home runs and 142 RBI over his four-year career with the Golden Panthers before being selected in the sixth round of the 2002 draft by the Pirates. Eldred joins Mike Lowell as the only FIU alumns in the MLB.

COURTESY PHOTO

The Big Show

NEWS

SPORTS

OPINION

LIFE!

and now ... BREAKING NEWS

The newspaper you trust is online 24/7

www.BeaconNewspaper.com

BE THE FIRST TO KNOW
SPORTS

ROLLER COASTER OF OBSTACLES

Women’s soccer captain has motivation to overcome career setbacks

By GABRIEL MEDINA
Contributing Writer

Senior Nastassia Rodriguez, a center midfielder and captain of the women’s soccer team, believes that life is all about the obstacles you face, and the lessons you learn from them.

Rodriguez began playing soccer when she was 11-years-old and has been a steady player, and steady student ever since.

Two major soccer-related injuries have plagued her since the start of high school.

As a freshman in high school, Rodriguez had surgery on her right knee. “That was my fist surgery,” she said. “The doctors told me that I would be back [to normal] eight weeks [after the surgery].” I got back in six and started for the varsity team as a freshman in high school. That was a very big accomplishment.”

Rodriguez had surgery on her left ear a few years later, which left her 75 percent deaf in that ear.

“Deaf in that ear,” Rodriguez said. “Things happen in life that we don’t understand. It’s important [for us] to keep faith in God.”

Though many people told her not to push herself too hard for fear that she would injure herself further, Rodriguez remained persistent.

“I love [soccer],” she said. “I can get injured just as much while driving a car down the street. Why not do what I love?”

By her own admittance, Rodriguez isn’t the star player of the soccer team. However, the girl who drives around in a bulky Ford F350 has a unique form of motivation.

“My best friend passed away when I was sixteen,” Rodriguez said. “She taught me to live life while you can because it’s too short.”

Maria Kassaab, Nastassia’s friend, was diagnosed with cancer when the two were 12-years-old.

Felipe Rodriguez played soccer when he was younger and enlisted his daughter at the Coral Gables Youth Center when she was 11-years-old. Nastassia has never regretted it one bit.

“I’m the soccer player that I am today because soccer [was almost] taken away from me,” she said. “I’ve had a lot of injuries that have opened my eyes and made me see that soccer is a privilege that allows you to use your body [competitively]. It’s a privilege to be able to run and pass.”

Rodriguez has a love for many other things other than soccer. “I especially love roller coasters.”

Felipe Rodriguez said his daughter plans to earn a racing license after college.

“She enjoys racing, as do I and her brother, Felipe, Jr. [Nastassia and her brother] drive really fast! [Nastassia] has always been a strong-willed girl,” her father said.

Rodriguez called herself a “stable student athlete.” She currently maintains a 3.0 cumulative GPA.

“It’s tough maintaining [my grades] because of athletics,” she said. “Student athletes have to do everything a student does, plus everything that an athlete has to do. It’s a rigorous schedule.”

Rodriguez also joked that she has become a pro in time management.

“Nastassia [was] in the gifted program in elementary school, middle school and high school,” her father said.

She made the varsity soccer team during her freshman year at Coral Gables Senior High School and helped the Cavalleros to four district championships, two GMAC titles, a pair of regional championships, and to a state runner-up finish in 2000.

During Fall semester of 2002, Rodriguez attended Appalachian State University on a soccer scholarship, but transferred to FIU to play soccer in her hometown and to be closer to her family.

The 21-year-old center midfielder is currently studying international business, but admitted that she did not know what she wanted to do with the degree.

“[All I know] is that whatever I do in life, I’m going to be happy,” Rodriguez said. “If tomorrow I feel like going to Europe, then I’m going to go.”

Despite her resolve nature, Felipe Rodriguez does not worry about his daughter. He and wife Veronica allowed Nastassia and her own decisions as they were growing up so that they would learn the consequences of making wrong choices early in life.

“Life is just a big school year,” Nastassia Rodriguez said. “Life is full of experiences and that’s what makes you who you are.”

Just as no one was worried about Rodriguez when the subject turned to education, no one seems to worry about her when it turns to the rest of her life. Because whatever happens to her, she is always prepared to learn.

CLASSIFIEDS

HELP WANTED

Loan Officer Needed for CitTrust Mortgage. Guaranteed 100 days to greatness! Bilingual, sales and math skills to work M-F. Training available, commission based, 40K/year. Please call Luis 305-801-5700

BABYSITTER EAST HOLLYWOOD Family looking for a responsible college student to babysit a 3 1/2 year old boy. Some driving may be necessary. Experience and recommendations required. Please contact Beth @ 954-540-8559

TELEMARKETERS NEEDED, SALARY PLUS COMMISSION, KENDALL AREA BI-LINGUAL, HOURS M-TU 4:45 – 8:45 SAT 10-3p.m. 305-595-9995

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR RENT

HOUSE FOR RENT BY THE ROOM FOR FIVE FEMALE FIU STUDENTS. NO SMOKING OR PETS. $500 MONTHLY. UTILITIES INCLUDED. 3 MILES FROM UNIVERSITY CAMPUSES. ACCESSIBLE BY BUS ROUTE KA. CONTACT AUGUSTO AT (954) 253-9004

LEADER: Captain Nastassia Rodriguez shows leadership by encouraging her teammates during a game.

SPORTS

LEADER: Captain Nastassia Rodriguez shows leadership by encouraging her teammates during a game.

Coach speaks out on Lowell

COMMENTARY

By DANNY PRICE

FIIU Baseball Coach

While I am not a frequent listener to sports talk radio, the innuendos and whispers defaming the reputation of the Florida Marlins’ Mike Lowell are deafening.

I have known Mike as both a college and professional athlete and can vouch for his character as sterling. Mike’s commitment to the South Florida community through his philanthropic and humanitarian efforts is exemplary, while his real life victory over testicular cancer has been well documented.

The great Ted Williams once said that hitting a baseball being hurled up to 100 miles per hour is the single hardest thing to do in all of sports.

It is only natural then, that Major League Baseball players, like all of us in everyday life, go through ups and downs in our performance levels. If you were fortunate enough to know his wife and parents, you would realize that Mike Lowell is a quality human being.

To give up on an athlete and person of his caliber, or to believe that his performance this season is linked in any way to any unnatural substances, is just preposterous.
Men’s soccer coach Karl Kremser announced his team’s 2005 season schedule on July 18.

The schedule has the Golden Panthers playing 17 regular season games that include a nine-game conference schedule.

They also play seven games against teams that advanced to the 2004 NCAA Tournament.

“It is a challenging schedule to say the least,” said coach Kremser, who is entering his 26th season coaching the team. “It is certainly in keeping with tradition since we usually play a tough schedule. But now that we face 2005 NCAA Tournament qualifiers Santa Clara and San Francisco.

They will then go west for the SCU/USF Adidas Classic from Sept. 16 through Sept. 18, 2005 season schedule on July 25.

The Golden Panthers will play in two in-season tournaments. The FIU Diadora Classic set for the very next day against Florida Atlantic, Alabama A&M and Xavier.

They will join FIU as associate members of the conference USA schedule.

All conference USA match will be at home Sept. 30, versus Kentucky. The Golden Panthers will also play in two in-season tournaments. The FIU Diadora Classic at the University Park campus, from Sept. 16 through Sept. 18, will feature Florida Atlantic, Alabama A&M and Xavier.

The team returns five starters from last season: forward Shawn Crowe and midfielders Cernius, Jean Camere.

The Golden Panthers opened the 2004 season with an 11-7 record and its fourth consecutive NCAA tournament appearance.

The men’s soccer team finished the 2004 season with an 11-7 record and its fourth consecutive NCAA tournament appearance.

The team returns five starters from last season: forward Carron Williams, who was the team’s leading scorer in 2004 and an NSCAA/Adidas All-South Second Team selection, goalis Shawn Crowe and midfielders Lucas Scudeleur, Jared Rose and Jean Camere.

The conference also features six teams that advanced to the 2004 NCAA Tournament – FIU, SMU, South Carolina, UCF, Memphis and Tulsa.

The Golden Panthers will open the regular season on the road against South Florida on Sept. 2. Their home opener is set for the very next day against Missouri State.

Their inaugural Conference USA match will be at home Sept. 30, versus Kentucky. The Golden Panthers will also play in two in-season tournaments. The SCU/USF Adidas Classic match round-robin schedule. The top eight finishers in the regular season will qualify for November’s conference tournament.

Conference USA also features four of the NCAA’s top-10 winningest active soccer coaches in SMU’s Schellas Hyndman, Southern California’s Mark Berson, Marshall’s Bob Gray and FIU’s Kremser.

The conference also features