2-3-2005

The Beacon, February 3, 2005

Florida International University

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.fiu.edu/student_newspaper

Recommended Citation
http://digitalcommons.fiu.edu/student_newspaper/15

This work is brought to you for free and open access by the Special Collections and University Archives at FIU Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Panther Press (formerly The Beacon) by an authorized administrator of FIU Digital Commons. For more information, please contact dcc@fiu.edu.
Motorcycle accident claims student’s life

By C. JOEL MARINO
Senior Staff Writer

Joshua Bolivar Gomez, a sophomore who was majoring in criminal justice, passed away on the afternoon of December 11, 2004, after his motorcycle collided head-on with a car on West 20 Ave. He was 20 years old.

Gomez was traveling south bound on West 20 Ave. on his way back home to Sweetwater, after trying to acquire a license plate in Hialeah for his motorcycle. A car traveling west on the same road made an illegal turn onto West 62 St., just as Gomez was crossing the intersection.

The motorcycle hit the front of the car as the car made the turn, ejecting Gomez from his seat and sending him beneath the car and onto the sidewalk. Gomez died on impact.

The police found the driver of the car to be at fault. Gomez’s parents did not allow him to buy the 2003 Suzuki motorcycle, but after he purchased the motorcycle with his credit card, there was no way the family could return it.

“He always wanted a bike and he really wanted to get that one,” said senior Vanessa Gomez.

Preview the rest of the article...
NEWSFLASH

ON CAMPUS

Department of Theatre and Dance production selected for regional festival

The Kennedy Center American College Theatre Festival (KCACTF) has selected FIU’s production of “Romeo and Juliet: The East West Project” to perform in the festival’s Regional IV Festival in February. The play is one of seven that will be performed at the prestigious festival, after being selected through a competitive process.

The KCACTF, which was founded by Roger L. Stevens in 1969, is a national theater program that involves about 18,000 college students nationwide. It has served as a catalyst in improving the quality of college theatre in the United States.

Each year, during January and February, regional festivals showcase the best productions entered and offer a variety of activities, including regional-level awards and programs. Three judges, who were selected to serve the KCACFT national committee, invite four to six of the best and most diverse artistic performances to invite to showcase at the regional festivals, all expenses paid.

One of this year’s seven showcases that the judges selected is the Department of Theatre and Dance’s production of “Romeo and Juliet: The East West Project.” Directed by associate professor Phillip Church, the play is set in a modern day Muslim-American community and tells the story of two lovers who struggle to be together despite the ethnic differences of their families, who are opposed to the match.

NATIONAL

U.S. soldiers opposed to Iraq war seek refuge in Canada

Jeremy Hinzman, paratrooper-turned-Iraq war deserter, has a lot in common with the thousands of Vietnamese War-era draft dodgers who poured into Canada decades ago. Like them, he sought asylum in a country that did not support a U.S.-led conflict, to avoid fighting what he deemed an illegal war.

But the lean, eloquent South Dakota native was not drafted. He voluntarily enlisted in the Army, became a paratrooper in the 101st Airborne and then deserted, in protest of the Iraq war, to avoid fighting what he deemed an illegal war.

He was assigned to the platoon of paratroopers who were deployed to Baghdad, but refused to fight. Instead, he called his mother from a pay phone at a military hospital near Baghdad and told her he had deserted. Hinzman was arrested and then released.

He came to the United States in 2003 and settlement lawyers obtained a U.S. asylum ruling in favor of Hinzman. But the Army has fought to have Hinzman removed from the United States since 2004. A federal judge ruled against the Army’s appeal last year, but the case has been appealed to the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

Meanwhile, Hinzman earned his bachelor’s degree in history at the San Diego-based Point Loma Nazarene University, and his master’s degree in public administration at San Diego State University.

“I was looking to be with people who believed in peace,” Hinzman said. “I heard that in Canada there was a group of people who started the East West Project.” Directed by associate professor Phillip Church, the play is set in a modern day Muslim-American community and tells the story of two lovers who struggle to be together despite the ethnic differences of their families, who are opposed to the match.

INTERNATIONAL

Japan may donate anime programs to Third World

The Foreign Ministry is considering providing popular anime programs for free to television stations in developing countries to promote cultural exchanges and help expand the market for the genre, sources said Saturday.

The ministry will most probably provide the money for the project to the Japan Foundation, an independent administrative agency under the ministry’s jurisdiction, which will purchase the broadcasting rights of the programs.

The sources said the ministry and the foundation were talking about purchasing several anime series of 30-minute episodes including one about soccer, because of the sport’s popularity worldwide.

Anime has become extremely popular in Europe and North America over the past few years, and about 60 percent of cartoon shows aired in the world are produced in Japan.

This popularity, however, has yet to permeate developing countries, where the audiovisual market is not as well developed and broadcasters lack the money to import Japanese programs.

The ministry started market research in Africa, Asia and the Middle East last year, asking its embassies to report what types of cartoons were popular, or if the countries have aired Japanese programs.

J.R.R. Tolkien and H.L. Mencken shared that view. Marino says he wouldn’t get that out of his head and decided to stick with the phrase as the name of the book club.

After a brief hiatus in 2004, the FIU Book Club is ready to start reading again. Marino believes that there is an overwhelming need for the club at FIU.

“We needed a book club run by students where we can discuss the books we want to discuss and where we can talk about them the way we want to. There are no papers or tests. Everything’s free to interpretation, so there’s no way the clear choice when the club was deciding on its reading material.”

Club Treasurer Kenneth Rojas enjoyed discussing “The DaVinci Code” with the book club. “We had a real sense of giving it our own direction. The discussions were a lot less constructed in terms of thought. We were free to go on different paths and develop different ideas,” Rojas said.

The club enjoyed the advantages of meeting together to discuss the book.

Together, members analyzed the deeper meanings and allusions in the novel, something they wouldn’t have been able to do if they read the book by themselves.

“We talked about the Merovingians, the history of Arthur and his quest, symbols within the novel, something they wouldn’t have been able to do if they read the book by themselves,” Marino said.

“Life of Pi” was one of the most prestigious awards in literature in 2002, the Man Book Prize. But despite its intriguing plot and critical acclaim, it seems like an odd selection for the club. Compared to “The Life of Pi,” “Life of Pi” is an obscure novel. Most people haven’t heard of it.

When asked why he chose “Life of Pi” for the Book Club’s reading this semester, Marino explained, “I read the back of the book, and I was fascinated by the plot. I thought, ‘Well, I think between the stress of textbooks and assigned reading, people forget the value of real literature, and what it is to read for leisure and interest.’”

Oliva eagerly anticipates reading “Life of Pi” with the FIU book club.

“I think between the stress of textbooks and assigned reading, people forget the value of real literature and what it is to read for leisure and interest. It is important for students to make time for a book they really have an innate interest in,” Oliva said.

The FIU Book Club’s first meeting will be next Thursday, Feb. 10, at 2:30 p.m. in the Bookstore Café in GC at University Park. For more information, e-mail bookclub@fiu.edu.
Insurgents fail to derail Iraqi election

By TOM LASSETER Knight Ridder

Iraq’s first democratic elections in 50 years were marred by 10 suicide bombers. Forty-four people were reported killed and untold numbers of mortar shells rained down on polling sites and the nation’s government center.

Because the death toll fell far short of what many had feared, the voting was a clear political victory for U.S. and Iraqi security forces. It was unclear, however, whether the insurgents were fueled by Iraqi security forces and by the 150,000 U.S. troops conducting aggressive operations or whether most of them took the day off to wait for better times, places and targets.

“The streets of Baghdad were not filled with blood as mentioned by the terrorist groups,” said Farid Ayar, an official with the Independent Electoral Commission of Iraq. “Like many others in Iraq, Ayar seemed to be hedging his bets. The elections were a political win for the interim Iraqi government and the American administration that backs it, but few Iraqis or Americans were prepared to declare the insurgency defeated.

Thar al Naqib, a spokesman for interim Prime Minister Ayad Allawi, was less reserved. “Today the terrorists lost the war,” he said. “It is a historic victory for Iraq.”

While the insurgents failed to derail the elections, they succeeded in dictating how the voting was conducted. No civilian cars were allowed on the streets because of the hundreds, if not thousands, of Iraqis killed by car bombers in the past year. Top Iraqi officials, guarded by phalanxes of Western security contractors, cast their votes in a compound guarded by Bradley fighting vehicles and American soldiers.

There’s still deep-rooted worry that the vote could spark more violence between a now-disenfranchised Sunni Muslim minority and the long-oppressed Shiite majority that’s almost certain to dominate the results.

Polling centers in the dangerous Sunni towns south of Baghdad, Mahmoudiyah and Latifiyah, were closed until early afternoon because of security concerns, according to election officials. In Fallujah, to the west, the same reason kept 100 of a planned 140 sites closed all day. Insurgents attacked polling stations in Baqubah, another Sunni hotspot, at least 30 times during a 24-hour period, though most of the attacks didn’t inflict any casualties.

Iraqi security forces, however, cut other potential attacks off at the pass by tightly controlling the areas around the polling stations, albeit with ample help from American military officials and U.S. troops who remained largely out of sight, if not out of mind.

By the end of the day, nine insurgent wearing suicide belts and a car bomber, along with mortar and other attacks, killed more than 40 people. In a country where coordinated attacks have killed more than 140 people in one day, it was an acceptable number.

Beloved student loses life in fatal accident

By ISIDRO PENTZKE/THE BEACON

GOMEZ, from page 1

Joshua’s older sister. The family became aware of the accident later that night after finding a detective’s note on the door of their house. “We couldn’t believe it at first. It’s just one of those things that no one expects and we all took it in our own ways,” Vanessa Gomez said.

Funeral services were held later that week at Bernardino Garcia’s Funeral Home on Bird Road. Joshua spent a year at Florida Atlantic University, where he played for their soccer team before transferring to FIU. Friends from both schools attended the wake. “Everybody was there – everybody from church, all his soccer friends, their girlfriends, their friends, everybody sent cards and flowers. We’re still getting cards,” Vanessa Gomez said.

Funeral Gomez was remembered by his family for his hard work, like helping his father construct a new deck for their house and helping with the landscaping and other work around the house. He was known as a good friend who refused to do things he deemed bad. “His friends used to say that, out of all of them, he was the best one. He never got involved with anything bad – he was like a nun,” Vanessa Gomez said.

Though some time has passed since the day of the accident, she admits that Joshua’s memory will always be with her.

“We’re all trying to handle this the best way that we can, but we just can’t ever erase them from our lives. He was a good boy. He was a good brother.”

He is survived by his mother, father and another sister, Yamell.

JOSE MARTI CEREMONY: Students and faculty attended the Jose Marti Cuban Club ceremony on Jan. 28 at Biscayne Bay Campus to commemorate the late poet. Many admired the glass vases full of coffee beans that served as creative center pieces containing lit candles and a Jose Marti poem (left). Children of all ages also attended the event and participated in a fashion show which took place after the formal ceremony. James Paredes/The Beacon

$135,000 in free cash scholarships

College Poker Championship

Who will be the College Poker Champion for 2005? Play for $135,000 in cash scholarships.

Enter online at www.ColeagePokerChampionship.com using the code NAG3K.
WINNER & LOSER

WINNER
Norwegian pizza lover: Erik Olson, a Norwegian soccer player recently signed with a new team because he was offered one pizza a week. Maybe a pizza a week will keep the doctor away as well.

LOSER
Crazy naked guy: Clint Catcheside, a 47-year-old father, attacked policeman Yendue Fawchim who was trying to arrest his son on Jan. 25. Fawchim said Catcheside attacked him, in the nude, protecting his son from arrest. Catcheside was recently nominated for the Father of the Year award.

A lesson for Facebook newbies

By DARA BRAMSON
Staff Writer

Were you a victim of the slap bracelet fad in elementary school? How about the pog phenomenon, or that Magic-card madness? Have you ever owned a CD by Chumbawamba?

If you answer yes to one or more of these questions, then www.facebook.com is for you.

The Facebook is an online directory that connects people through social networks at colleges. Allison Shuffield, a sophomore at Florida State University put it simply: “It’s like being in the first grade again. Can we be friends? Circle yes or no.”

Up until my discovery of The Facebook, that was my system for making friends. Getting started is no more complicated than finding parking at FIU. Simply log on, sign up using your school e-mail address and enter all of your personal information. You can enter anything from your major and your screen name to your sexual orientation or whatever emo poetry makes you cry this week.

Once you’re finished, congratulations! You’ve just established a quick and easy way for someone to effectively stalk you.

Unlike similar websites such as Friendster or Myspace, The Facebook only allows students of the same school to view each other’s pages. The process of acquiring friends is time consuming, yet necessary to becoming a committed member of this online niche.

Trust me though, it’s worth it because this site will so get you out of your shell. It’s a fun, wild side and that you don’t spend all your time on The Facebook. Also, if you have any photos of yourself drunk and riding a shopping cart, put those up too. Or, you can just rotate these pictures weekly (since you can only post one at a time) to demonstrate that you are definitely not obsessed with The Facebook.

THE DO’S AND DON’TS OF FACEBOOK

DO
• put “Fight Club” as one of your favorite movies. Everyone loves “Fight Club,” even if you have never seen the entire movie.
• list bands no one has ever heard of as your favorite music. It makes you cooler. People who do not know you will think you are unique. Well, at least people will think you are cool until they find out you only saw the name of the band because you accidentally typed in “Coldplay” instead of “Coldplay” on Kazaa.
• post a picture of yourself chugging liquor straight from the bottle. This shows you have a fun, wild side and that you don’t spend all your time on The Facebook. Also, if you have any photos of yourself drunk and riding a shopping cart, put those up too. Or, you can just rotate these pictures weekly (since you can only post one at a time) to demonstrate that you are definitely not obsessed with The Facebook.

DON’T
• put “Whatever I Can Get” when they ask you what kind of relationships you want. Being a member of this site is a sign that you’ll take whatever you can get.
• forget to look at your wall. (The wall is the part of your page where friends can post comments about you.) Once, it took me two weeks to realize someone had gone on my page and wrote...
Rapper Ice Cube has changed from lyric busting gangster to star of family films in one short decade.

Needless to say, they were all hardcore. But what happened to Ice Cube? The Man, that’s what happened. The Man wasn’t selling enough of his crappy movies, so he had to take one of urban America’s legends to hook his product to get a new demographic.

"Are We There Yet?" was the number one movie in America last weekend, mostly because it’s February and all the good movies are on the back burner until after the Oscars. But think about it, America is embracing Ice Cube. Something just isn’t right when Debbie St. Clair of Kalamazoo, Mich. can look in the paper and say “Ice Cube has a new movie out! Well, hot damn. We got to get all the kids together for this one.”

“Friday” was funny and “Next Friday” was cool, “Friday after Next?” was just pushing it. I mean, what’s next? Snoop Dogg doing the voice of an actual dog in a movie about a zebra who wants to be a race horse? Oh wait...that’s right, he really does that in “Racing Stripes.” How could I forget that?

But I guess you can’t blame the rappers for this type of behavior. The only ones you can really blame (other than The Man of course) are the children of rappers. Rappers from that era are now starting families, and I don’t think they really want their kids seeing some lady that isn’t mommy rubbing all over daddy. So they make stuff like “Racing Stripes” and “Are We There Yet?” to fool their children into thinking they are just messing around when they go off to work.

Oh well. When those children get older and find all those copies of “F The Police” at their nearest record store listed as “Oldies,” they’ll wise up, and therapy isn’t that bad anyway.

So if I were to somehow become Ice Cube’s manager, I think the next move we would make is to shake things up a bit and reunite NWA. Sure some of them aren’t even alive anymore, but if Queen can hit the road without Freddy, then NWA can come back without Eazy.

Old friends and classmates reunite as members of online community

FACE, from page 4

ten, “Dara, you left your diapers at my house. I’ll leave them in the mailbox.” Of course, everyone had seen my wall before I had.

I send out mails to entire groups. This is annoying (and will not get you laid). No matter how profound or remarkable you think your thoughts are, nobody cares. Plus, signing on The Facebook and getting excited over having a messed up email someone sent to the world, makes that person a kiddy. And definitely do not send chain letters or “Thoughts of the Day.” That’s what middle school was for.

Another wonderful thing about Facebook is that anyone can create a group about anything they want. A group is simply a feature of the site that allows you to join a forum with other people who have similar interests.

There are tasteful ones, like "Class of 2007" or "The Harry Potter Fan Club," but let’s face it, it is more fun to join a group with a name like “Addicted to Booby.”

Athelea Perez, a junior at FIU, enjoys the amusing variety of the different groups.

“I’m proud to be a Facebook member. Whether I want to be a member of the ‘I Am on Facebook to Get Laid’ group or even the ‘Bush Sux’ group, anything I could possibly be interested in or offended by is available at my disposal.”

For those of you who are already addicted to The Facebook, you have probably accepted that your infatuation is everlasting.

My sincere apologies to those of you who unearh The Facebook after reading this article. The decline in your grades and social life will plague your conscience and probably drive me to drink. Be sure to look for pictures of me riding a shopping cart.

With that said, I have to admit I enjoy the simplicity of reconnecting with old friends on The Facebook.

It’s likely that I’ll never talk to the random high school peers I have declared friendships with on Facebook, but nonetheless, the site offers a strange sense of continuity – proof that life after high school did not end and then restart in a different realm.

The Facebook is what you make of it. Whether you choose to be an over-obsessed visitor, a sleazy group junkie or just a normal college student enjoying your ability to reconnect with your middle school sweethearts, I encourage you to sign on.

Who knows? We can even rendezvous online after you check out my page and spot me on campus. Don’t forget to thank me for helping you get laid.

By DANNY MUELA
Staff Writer

I realized not too long ago, that I am white. It’s something that most dazzling suburbanites like myself must realize in order to have some sort of cultural identity and focus when it comes to dealing with people and situations in life.

I would like to add that even though I am indeed whiter than Mr. Rogers in a blizzard, I know selling out when I see it. The term “selling out” gets thrown about a lot these days, and half the time it isn’t justified.

The individual whom I will accuse of selling out has pressed his fans long enough and deserves to be called out.

Mr. Cube himself? I don’t think so. Remember Eazy-E, Dr. Dre, Ice Cube. Remember NWA?

Needless to say, they were all about rebellion, they really need an introduction. The Raiders and the Black Panthers. They were all about rebellion, the "Man" doesn’t seem right when Debbie St. Clair of Kalamazoo, Mich. can look in the paper and say “Ice Cube has a new movie out! Well, hot damn. We got to get all the kids together for this one.”

“Friday” was funny and “Next Friday” was cool, “Friday after Next?” was just pushing it. I would rather see 100 more “Friday”s than one family comedy starring Ice Cube. I mean, what’s next? Snoop Dogg doing the voice of an actual dog in a movie about a zebra who wants to be a race horse? Oh wait...that’s right, he really does that in “Racing Stripes.” How could I forget that?

But I guess you can’t blame the rappers for this type of behavior. The only ones you can really blame (other than The Man of course) are the children of rappers. Rappers from that era are now starting families, and I don’t think they really want their kids seeing some lady that isn’t mommy rubbing all over daddy. So they make stuff like “Racing Stripes” and “Are We There Yet?” to fool their children into thinking they are just There’s good news for dance lovers. The Student Programming Council is offering free dance classes at the Biscayne Bay Campus at the Wolfe University Center. Students can choose between belly dancing on Mondays, salsa on Tuesdays and ballroom dancing on Thursdays – or any combination of the three. All classes take place from 6-7 p.m. in WUC 155 (sometimes 157), and all classes are open, so while faithful attendance is encouraged, suddenly deciding to start attending in the middle of the semester isn’t a problem.

Can’t choose between the three, and don’t have time to take them all? The Beacon attended the first class for each dance to give you an inside report on what you can expect.

If you’re trying to beat your cousins to be the favorite grandchild, or you’re a guy looking for a way to impress women, or you just love classic dances, ballroom dancing is the class for you. Husband–wife team Richard and Karen Campbell demonstrate each technique slowly and clearly. They teach the man’s and the woman’s parts separately, then show how to combine them flawlessly.

Within the first 15 minutes, the Campbells will have you believing that you too can follow gracefully like Karen or lead naturally like Richard. The instructors hope to teach five or six dances over the course of the semester, which may include swing, foxtrot, waltz, mambo, cha-cha and merengue. The dances they teach depend on what students want to learn.

“We want something that will get them out on the dance floor,” said Karen. “The first year they had a group that wanted to learn tango, so they focused several classes on that...
It’s no surprise ‘Aviator’ holds so many Oscar nominations

By ELENA SANTALO Contributing Writer

Martin Scorsese’s “The Aviator” landed in box offices around the world, to tell the tale of the grand avi- or himself, Howard Hughes (Leonardo DiCaprio). This film marks Scorsese’s sixth academy award nomi- nation for best director. He is the front-runner in the category, because not only did he do an incredible job, but he gains sympa- thy for not having won any previous nominations. The almost three-hour film skims across Hughes’ life from the late 1920’s until the 1940’s. As a child, Hughes had dreams of “making the biggest movies, the fast- est planes and being the richest man in the world.” Although he grew up to be an obsessive com- pulsive, his eccentricity helped him realize these dreams. He made a few extravagant and expen- sive movies, but his true passion was for flight. He was constantly inventing new airplanes and testing them, regardless of the expense.

“This is definitely DiCaprio’s best film that I’ve seen,” said freshman Alex Nuche. DiCaprio’s portrayal of this aviation pioneer is the most amazing part of this film. The role was extremely tough, yet DiCaprio comes shinin- ing. He does it all, from washing his hands to the point of bleeding and not wanting to touch the doorknob, to locking himself in a room and letting himself completely go, further developing Hughes’ struggle to keep himself composed and out of his neurotic state. DiCaprio truly does an amazing job, showing the audience what Hughes accomplished and what his life was really like.

DiCaprio also reveals Hughes’ strength of character uniquely whenever he is faced with his biggest business competitor, Juan Trippe (Alex Baldwin), the famous owner of Pan American Airlines. The rivalry between Baldwin and DiCaprio’s characters provides some of the most captivating scenes in the film. Although we are used to seeing Baldwin as a good guy in previ- ous films, he captures Trippe’s malevolence with a twinkle in his eye— even when Hughes triumphs and Trippe is left with nothing.

Of course, what would the movie be without Hughes’ famous lead- ing ladies? Among them are the elegant Katharine Hepburn (Cate Blanchett) and the ravishing Ava Gardner (Kate Beck- insale). Blanche is the perfect chatty, athletic Hepburn we all remember. The scenes between DiCaprio and Blanche are the most fun and lovable. You get caught in their romance and in the absurd way she keeps him normal.

Beckinsale’s performance, although not as significant, is utterly adorab able. With her swift and sexy air, she reveals Gardner’s appeal to the audience, and brings a smile each time she calls Hughes, “Baby.” The film is very well made and also had some educational value. “I enjoyed the movie because I learned a lot of the cool things that Howard Hughes had done,” said freshman Andrea Arreaga.

I would definitely agree, because before the film, I saw Hughes as just another famous billionaire, but now I see his influence on the movie industry, especially with the evolution of the plane. All in all, the cast works extremely well together, and although the film took longer than I prefer, the cast and set keep the entertainment alive. Whether you see it in the movie theater or rent it from Blockbuster when it is released on DVD, I highly recommend this movie as a must see.

THE SKY’S THE LIMIT: Martin Scorsese’s newest film “The Aviator,” starring Leonardo DiCaprio, portrays the young Howard Hughes and his tumultuous rise to fame and fortune. Courtesy Photo
DANCE classes offer thorough instruction

 Belly dancing to be a woman’s dance form, there are a lot of great male belly dancers as well. Over the course of the semester, she hopes to build on students progress to teach more advanced techniques, but of course, new students are always welcome.

“I love helping people express themselves,” Rava said. “[Belly dancing] is great for expression, finding inner beauty and feeling more confident.”

Students who gave the class a try seemed pleased by what they found.

“I saw the sign and noticed [the session] was on the same day of my class, so I came in,” said Malene Rivera. “It was fun, something new.”

For those who’ve been missing out on the salsa craze and want to dance with their friends, the Tuesday class shouldn’t be missed. While the University Park campus offers salsa classes through The Salsa Kings at $5 a lesson, BBC students can learn for free from Jim Chang, whose group, Tropical Flavor, has performed at the last two Latinos Unidos celebrations. Chang teaches each step by first walking the students through it several times, then setting it to music.

As students learn more steps he adds them to the basic step and repeats them until everyone feels they’ve mastered the concept. He adds humor to basic principles, and students laugh their way through class.

“In salsa the man has total, absolute control,” Chang said. He let the men smile and the women raise their eyebrows for a moment before adding, “It’s the only thing in life we have total control over. So ladies, please don’t take it away from us!”

This got a laugh out of everyone, and the dancers became more relaxed. “They become my friends, not just my students,” Chang said.

First-time salsa participant Jennifer May, a class of 2002 alumna, said she felt “very fortunate” to be able to take the class, especially when she learned that that students at the other campus were paying for salsa lessons. She says she was interested in the class because it can be embarrassing to be Spanish and not be able to dance salsa. “It’s going to take some practicing, but I picked it up faster than I thought,” said May. Chang is confident of his students ability to succeed. “Anyone who has an interest in learning will at least accomplish enough to have a great time,” Chang said.

Senior Joel Picanco is having a great time with salsa. “I love [salsa] because it’s real passionate and a very sensual dance, and at the same time it’s a lot of communication,” he said.

For those searching for their next passion, or just looking for someone to be passionate about, the “Dancing with the Wölfe” series is a great opportunity. As a belly dance participant nicely put it, “It’s free, so why not try it out.”
Puerto Rican shortstop leads by example

By ALDEN GONZAELZ
Staff Writer

Luis Rivera, one of the leading men on the FIU baseball team, traces the roots that make him the talented shortstop he is today back to the Puerto Rican town that made him the talented shortstop he is today back to the Puerto Rican town of Carolina.

Coming into his third year with the Golden Panthers, Rivera has developed a love for the game. As the young age of 14, something clicked. He started to practice or going into a baseball military "diamond is his way of communicating with players."

"I am a leader on the playing field," Rivera said. "I don't lead in the exercises or the running. I just do that on my own, quietly. But when it's time to get on the field, everybody listens to me and looks to me for answers."

Head coach Danny Price knows that his skills behind the plate and on the infield are essential to the team's success.

"He's the middle of our defense and if we could get him going, that will jump start the other guys in our lineup," Price said.

After being drafted in the 49th round by the Kansas City Royals right out of high school, Rivera smiled but declined the offer. Instead Rivera accepted a scholarship to come to FIU to prove to scouts and teams that the 49th round pick is too high for his liking.

By hitting an astounding .337 at the plate with 41 RBIs and 14 stolen bases in his first year, Rivera was named Sun Belt Conference Freshman of the Year and was selected for the Louisville Slugger Freshman All-American Team.

TOUGH TIMES

It wasn't all glamorous for the 6-1 Carolina native. In fact, the road to paradise was probably bumpier than the rocky infiel d. At which Rivera shagged groundballs in Puerto Rico.

It is here where baseball can be seen in its purest form.

There are no press boxes or air conditioned clubhouses. Lights don't tower in the sky and background music is not played every time a new half inning starts, but players always came out to play with Rivera.

"The fielding here is easier because everything clicks, and I'm smooth," Rivera said of the grounds at University Park Stadium. "Over [in Puerto Rico] you can't keep your eye off the ball because it can bounce anywhere."

There are no state champions or all-state selections, but for Rivera and many others, baseball is an opportunity to get a better life. This is when his parents realized Rivera could find a better place to play baseball and develop in school. His parents sent him to Melbourne, Fla., to play in a military-like school.

Son of parents Lain and Naya, Rivera Jr. was always brought up with great expectations or the running. "I feel as if my fielding is the best aspect to my game," Rivera said. "I have no weaknesses out there."

Despite hitting safely in 19 of his last 22 games in the 2004 season, Rivera finished the year with a sub par .291 batting average. The team also had a down year, going 24-29 during the regular season.

"I really think our hitting was a big weakness last year as well as our defense," Rivera said. "I think we had a lot of bad luck pitching too."

With new recruits and a new mentality, Rivera hopes this year's team surpasses last year's stint.

"This team really has a chance of winning the conference this year," Rivera said.
Almonte battles cramps in tiring victory

“...in this position only because of what happened during the second half...” said Almonte. “I knew it was on time,” said Almonte. “But I thought they would call a travel or something. It was just crazy. When I threw the ball up, I didn’t even think it was going to go in, but it did.”

Although that play stole much of the attention of the game, FIU was put in such a position only because of what happened during the second half.

The Golden Panthers, who trailed by eight, 37-29, at halftime, found themselves trailing by as much as 14 halfway through the second frame. Roosevelt’s men then changed the course of the game. With eight minutes left to play, the Golden Panthers clawed their way back into the game with an 18-1 run led by Almonte and Matias and took their biggest lead of the game at 67-64.

N’Daire connected on two three pointers in the third overtime to give the Golden Panthers a one point lead, 96-95, with 1:23 to play. Following a lay up by Zack Wright, which gave the lead back to the University of Arkansas-Little Rock, Almonte went up for a shot and fell hard on his knee. Matias took the free throws, connecting on just one to tie the game at 97.

Byron Burnett claimed the rebound with authority, but to the displeasure of the crowd, the Golden Panthers could not convert and turned the ball over on a shot clock violation with 5.2 seconds to play. UALR in-bounded the ball with seconds left in the third overtime following a timeout, but they missed a jumper, and thus forced the fourth extra session.

Warren Gale, taking two free throws for an injured Almonte, made one, giving the Golden Panthers a two-point lead with 21 seconds to play on fourth victory. Trojan Brandon Freeman then converted on a long jumper with his foot on the line to tie the game as time expired in the fourth overtime. The deadlock continued at 103 heading into the seventh frame of the game.

The five overtimes were two short of the NCAA record of seven set between the University of Cincinnati and Bradley University on December 21, 1981. “I liked that our guys were back smiling again, even when we were down in the second half,” Rouco said.

With the win in front of a season-low in attendance of 649, the Golden Panthers move to 8-12 on the season and 1-6 in the conference, while the Trojans move to 12-8 on the season and 4-4 in Sun Belt Conference play.

There are seven games left in the season but only three will be played at Pharmed Arena: Arkansas State on Feb. 14, Western Kentucky on Feb. 26 and Middle Tennessee on Feb. 28.

SHORT ON PLAYERS

FIU battled with only nine eligible players on the bench, junior guard Julius Eppinger quit the team following a lack of playing time and Rouco indefinitely suspended Sheldon Bailey earlier in the week for an undisclosed violation of team rules.

DISCLAIMER

*Test names are registered trademarks of their respective owners.

HELP WANTED

COMPUTER EXPERTS

Work with one of the worlds best stock market traders to develop systems to be used in the global currency markets; the largest markets in the world. You will use your skills as a computer specialist to develop top notch trading systems. You will be paid a percentage of the profits generated by the systems. Highly lucrative opportunity. Contact: GFInvestor@aol.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

CAMPUS INTERVIEWS–LET’S MAKE THIS YOUR BEST SUMMER YET – CAMP WAYNE, northeastern PA-Counselor-Specialists for all Land/ Water Sports inc. Waterski, Wakeboard; Tennis, Golf, Baseball, Basketball, Soccer; Camping, Mountain Biking, Climbing/Ropes; Roller Hockey; Rocketry; Fine Arts; Theater; Radio; Video. RN’s for our Health Center. CDL. Drivers & Wait Staff. CAMPUS INTERVIEWS—THURS, FEB 15. Let’s get the ball rolling now! Online application www.campwayne.com; email info@campwayne.com; 1-888-549-2963 (516-883-3067)

Educated Enough to Rule the World?
Free Massive MultiPlayer Realm Management and War Strategy Game. Armageddon is Here- fight to dominate.
www.KingdomGames.com

Attention: All majors. Summer internship still available. Business and management training program. Average profit- $8,400. Resume builder. 3 hours college credit. Call for an information session on campus. Daniel

I liked that our guys were back smiling again, even when we were down in the second half. – Head coach Sergio Rouco

Golf, Baseball, Basketball, Soccer; Camp-
Baseball sweeps FAMU in season opener

By XAVIER VILLARMARZO
Staff Writer

After their night season-opener was postponed by rain, the baseball team began the season with a double-header on Jan. 29. Luckily for the Golden Panthers, the team was able to come out with a sweep of FAMU at University Stadium.

Senior David Asher led the pitching department in the first game with a complete game shutout. Sophomore Cody Jacobs led FIU offensively with two homeruns and five RBIs in a 6-0 victory.

Later in the afternoon, Elih Villanueva added a solid performance by allowing just two runs in six innings of work. Dennis Diaz went 3-for-3 with an RBI and a stolen base in the 5-3 victory.

In game one, redshirt junior Nick Cadena started the second inning with a single that Jacob followed with a home run to left field to give FIU a 2-0 lead.

In the forth inning, Cadena scored again the score 3-0, off a single by junior Randy Youtsey to make it 3-0.

The score didn't change until the eighth inning when Jacobs connected on his second homerun, a three-run blast that hit the scoreboard in left field to give FIU the 6-0 lead.

"We've been working all year on getting our foot down early and reacting to the pitch," said Jacobs.

Asher was proud by the play of his teammate.

"I got a lot of run support, especially from my catcher Cody Jacobs with his two homeruns," said Asher.

In Asher's first career complete game shutout, he struck out seven, walked none and allowed seven hits.

"I wasn't expecting to pitch the whole game. It was the first game of the season and I was just hoping on getting in some work," Asher said.

In the second game, with FIU down 1-0 in the top of the first, the team answered back in the bottom of the inning with an RBI single by senior Michael Lopez and another by Diaz in the second to take a 2-1 lead.

In the forth inning, after stealing third base, Cadena scored on a throwing error by FAMU to make it 3-1.

FIU then added two more runs in the fifth inning to take a 5-2 lead. Junior Yosvel Barroso started the inning with a double to left field and then moved over to third base on a sacrifice bunt. He then scored on an RBI single by junior Yohand Yam. Yam then scored off another FAMU error, their fourth of the game.

FAMU kept it close with a solo homerun off in the eighth off junior relief pitcher Matt Rainey, to make it 5-3. Rainey pitched two innings of relief, striking out one and allowing two hits and the aforementioned run.

Senior Danny Hernandez took the mound in the ninth inning and closed out the game with two strikeouts.

Starting pitcher Villanueva, in his first collegiate start, tallied six strikeouts, allowed five hits and walked one batter.

New volleyball coach

NEW COACH: Athletic Director Rick Mello announced on Jan. 26 that former Louisiana State and Arkansas-Little Rock assistant, Daniela Tomic, has accepted the head coaching position for the Golden Panther volleyball program.

“I am very excited about the opportunity to be the head coach at FIU,” said Tomic, who threw out the first pitch at the softball opener on Jan. 29. “This has long been a dream of mine, and I feel FIU has the potential to be one of the top programs in the Sun Belt.”

Do you feel like a sports fan because you love talking about sports? Want to be a sports reporter when you graduate?

Then the Sports section is the place for you! Get a head start on your career with us!

Stop by GC 210 or WUC 124 to apply.
FIU picks up SBC win in fifth overtime

By ANDONI GONZALEZ-RUA Staff Writer

Forty minutes of play couldn’t decide the winner on Jan. 30 at Pharmed Arena. As a matter of fact, neither could 45, 50, 55 or 60. However, 65 did.

The Golden Panthers men’s basketball team ended their seven-game losing streak, and more importantly, notched their first conference win of the season. The only catch—it took five extra periods of overtime.

FIU didn’t make a basket in the fifth overtime...

By XAVIER VILLARARMAZO Staff Writer

Going into Super Bowl week, the first person that came to my mind was Willis Reed. I know. Isn’t that crazy? Why would a basketball player who hasn’t played in three decades come to mind when I think of the biggest football game of the year?

For those who don’t know, Willis Reed has become synonymous in the sports world with team inspiration. In 1970, he almost single-handedly led the New York Knicks team to the NBA finals. This win really put us back to where we wanted to be.”

Now with Owens on the field, Belichick has to worry about whether Philly is using him as a decoy or if they are actually going to throw him. This opens up Philly’s options and gives them a legitimate chance of winning.

Even though you may think Terrell Owens and all his charisma, you have to admit that he’s a great player and can help your team. Another reason I’m picking against the Pats is that the Patriots have the Miami Dolphins’ division rivals. As the saying goes, “The enemy of my enemy is my friend.”