Adjunct’s infection
not MRSA

Two classrooms were closed and disinfected on Oct. 25 and 26 after an adjunct theater professor notified the department that she may have a staph infection.

The adjunct went to the hospital after noticing a boil in her skin on the evening of Oct. 25. After undergoing testing at a hospital, the results showed that she didn’t have the bacteria called methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus.

“A faculty member expressed concern that she may have contracted a mild case of staph infection, but then discovered that she didn’t have the [MRSA],” said David Bergwall, associate dean of the College of Architecture and The Arts.

Dr. Robert Dollinger, executive director University Health Services, spoke to the adjunct and said that she is in “good shape,” and will be back to teach Monday.

“She had a very minor boil. It’s not a serious infection from a public health point of view,” Dollinger said. “It’s not even MRSA.”

Upon hearing about the infection, the facilities management department disinfected classrooms in room 120 of the Wertheim Performing Arts Center and room 150 of Deuxieme Maison. A note was left in each of the rooms notifying students that classes had been cancelled and would resume Monday, Charles Cyrille, Emergency Management Coordinator, said that the classes were disinfected as a precautionary measure.

Dollinger said that the most common way people get infected is by physical contact.

“There wasn’t even a need to disinfect the classes. This is not an emergency and never should have been treated as a emergency,” Dollinger said. “The only time there should be an emergency like this is when there’s a threat.”

According to WebMd.com, MRSA is a staph infection that is resistant to methicillin and other commonly used antibiotics like penicillin, amoxicillin and oxacillin. This month, the Center for Disease Control reported that there were more deaths from MRSA in 2005 than from AIDS.

The report said that nearly 19,000 people died from MRSA in 2005. MRSA has usually been spread through healthcare facilities but are becoming increasingly common in student athletes participating in close-contact sports.

MRSA can begin as a reddened area on the skin, or resemble a pimple that can develop into a skin abscess or boil causing fever, pus, drainage, swelling, or pain. If you see a reddened area of your skin, a boil or abscess that is causing fever, local swelling and/or pain, you should see your physician urgently.

Students who feel they may have a serious staph infection should call the Student Health Clinic at University Park, 305-148-2403 or at the Biscayne Bay Campus, 305-919-5620.

Family firsts speak about college life

ELVIS RAMIREZ
Staff Writer

First generation students often do not know what to expect during their first year of university life.

Jonathan Klopp, the first member of his family to attend college, had no doubt he’d continue his education. With his mother wanting him to become a doctor he decided that majoring in biology would be his first step in his college career, although he wasn’t sure that’s what he wanted.

After realizing that his interests did not lie in biology, Klopp changed majors. According to Klopp, his impression of college life was very different than what it actually is.

“Things came at me that no one told me about,” said Klopp, now a sophomore majoring in international business and minorin in linguistics. “I didn’t know I had to hop into something right away.”

Guy Cayo, a senior studying business management who is also a first generation student, said that the social aspect of college life was just as dificult as selecting the right major.

It seems that first generation students find it harder to connect with their classmates, even first other first generation students. “I think the difference between [students whose parents have gone to university] is that getting to know people and things like that took longer for me,” Cayo said.

Cayo admitted that he rarely spoke to other people his first semester, both in and out of class. His life consisted of going to school and going home, Cayo said. Guy is the word he uses to describe his first days of college career.

Despite being stunned by the initial change between high school and university life, most of these students believe that they have done well for themselves.

FIU loses bid to host presidential debate

DANIELLA BACIGALUPO
Staff Writer

After NBC and Leadership Florida representatives explored FIU and other Florida universities last August to judge which campus was worthy of hosting the Democratic and Republican presidential debates Jan 23 and 25, Florida Atlantic University was announced the chosen location.

Despite losing the bid, FIU had the credentials and experience needed to host the live presidential debates, which will be broadcasted nationally by NBC.

Wendy Abberger, the executive director of Leadership Florida, a nonprofit group organizing the event, said she was “so impressed by the [FIU] staff, their enthusiasm and willingness to do whatever was necessary,” to make the event possible.

However, Leadership Florida’s press release Sept. 27 named FAU, in Boca Raton, as the hosting site for the debates.

Other universities evaluated included the University of Miami, University of Florida, University of South Florida and Florida State University.

“Final differences with the top candidates came down to structural nuances,” Abberger said.

The deciding factor was FAU’s Carole and Barry Kaye Performing Arts Auditorium for its 4,200-person capacity.

Anthony Rionda, the lecture coordinator of the Student Government Association who was part of the tour group last August, said the representatives were shown the Wertheim Performing Arts Center, the Graham Center Ballrooms and the new Frost Art Museum.

FIU plans consisted of staging the debates at PAC, converting the GC Ballrooms into a performance area.

“I think I did fantastic, even if my parents didn’t have the experience,” said Patricia Sando, a senior studying in FIU’s Honors College, majoring in psychology. “I didn’t have anyone to give me a heads-up on what to expect and how to expect it.”

Contrary to the conclusions from a study by the National Center for Education Statistics, which states that first generation students are at a disadvantage and often perform poorly at the university level, these students feel that they are not disadvantaged at all.
Larger facilities place FAU on an advantage

DEBATE, page 1

news wire room and spreading students throughout campus where the debates would be streamed live. The PAC stage’s conciseness rose reservations. “They had very specific criteria … It was all a very complicated process,” said Stephen Sauls, the vice president of government relations, and added that accommodations to enlarge the stage would have been carried out. Both NBC and the Republican National Committee had doubts on whether Boca Raton was the right place to hold the debates because the city “sounded snoozy,” said Robert Watson, professor at Lynn University and former political scientist at FAU, in an interview with the South Florida Sun-Sentinel. FAU’s President Frank Brogan used his contacts with the RNC and former Governor Jeb Bush to sway the decision to host the presidential debates at FAU. Watson told the Sun-Sentinel.

Bush and Brogan were elected Florida’s Governor and Lieutenant Governor in 1998. Abberger said decisions came down to a physical layout and “we just pecked away at the best of the best.” Fairness, not political weight, influenced the FAU site decision. Rionda said.

“Miami gets all of the debates. I guess they were trying to spread out the wealth,” Rionda said. The FAU site announcement comes after Florida’s controversial decision to hold presidential primaries early on Jan. 29, ahead of the nationally scheduled Feb. 5 date. The debates will be the last time presidential candidates can influence swing voters. FIU’s denial is a missed opportunity to tap into the University’s high number of recently registered voters, Rionda said. “The main goal should be to bring candidates to campus, so that [recently registered voters] can make an informed choice and hear both sides of the story,” he said.

The Student Government Association is sending proposals to each candidate, inviting them to give speeches on campus. Rionda said SGA received positive feedback from the Rudolph Giuliani campaign. He blamed the National Democratic Party’s disinterest in the recruitment of candidate campaigning in Florida to the State’s decisions to hold primaries early against party rules.

Oct. 17- While in the Wolfe University Center computer lab at Biscayne Bay Campus, a female student had her cellular phone removed from the desk while she left her belongings unattended.

Oct. 18- A student who had forgotten her wallet in the Green Library received a phone call from library staff stating that her wallet had been found and that it would be held at a circulation desk for her to pick up. The student returned to the library the next day to claim her wallet, the wallet, which contained $98.00, was missing.

Oct. 18- A student was taken to Baptist Hospital by a fellow student after sustaining a laceration to his left palm. The student accidently brought his hand down toward a vertical metal bar and cut his hand.

SGC-UP Notes

Oct. 18- A male was arrested at University Park Apartments after police responded to a previously trespassed person being on the premises. A resident of the apartment building was found to be hiding the male in the closet as police searched his room. After being processed by FIU police, the male admitted to smoking marijuana and drinking alcohol in the room, and also stated that he and the resident had a deal in which he would provide the student resident with groceries in exchange for housing.

Oct. 19- A faculty member had his FIU Faculty/ Parking Decal removed from the rear window of his car.

Compiled by Jessica Solis, police reporter

SGC-UP Notes

Oct. 24. Call to order: 4:21 p.m. Adjournment: 5:27 p.m.

President Reports (Marbely Hernandez)
- SGC-UP Web site is updated and all sections of the site will be operational soon. Report any broken links.
- Publix purchase orders are null and void until further notice.
- Medical School visit for beginning steps of accreditation will take place in November.
- Nov. 8 or 9: blood drive will donate $10 per student who donated blood, for the United Way charity.
- Vice President’s Report (Arthur “AJ” Meyer)
- Comment boxes will be placed in Primera Casa, Graham Center, Health Services and Fitness Center.
- Two other comment boxes may be placed on the engineering campus and the new student services complex in the upcoming stadium.
- Panther Tram event to raise awareness of the new service will take place November.
- Gracie’s Grill is under development.
- Comprometer’s Report (Sergio Ibarra)
- New budget report will allow SGC-UP to evaluate spending on all programs being funded by the SGC-UP.
- Report will be updated continually.

Student Services Report:
- Report will be updated continually.

Please call 305.436.2228

Laptops For Sale

Students discounts available

Laptop computers for Sale. Almost NEW and in perfect condition.

- Many still under manufacturer warranty. Incredible prices!!
- IBM Thinkpad T40 CENTURIO 4600
  1.5GHz/512MB/40GB/CDRW DVD/WiFi
- Dell Latitude D600 CENTURIO S470
  1.6GHz/124MB/400GB/CDRW DVD/WiFi
- Computer Solutions International
  - Other laptop sizes available

Please call 305.436.2228
Email: csi@bellsouth.net

The Beacon is available for viewing online at www.beaconnewspaper.com
FIU appoints Kenneth Fortun dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

University Provost Ronald Berkman announced Oct. 26 the appointment of Kenneth Fortun, professor of chemistry, as the new dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Fortun, who has served as associate dean in the college since 2001, will start his new position Dec. 20. He will replace Interim Dean Mark Szymczak.

Fortun has received multiple awards including the 1986 Boltz Award in Analytical Chemistry and the 2005 FIU Council of 100 Outstanding University Professor Award.

Documentary, panel to focus on Cuban opposition movement

A viewing of Dissident, a documentary about Oswaldo Paya Sardinas and his attempt to change Cuba’s legislation through the Varela Project, will be shown at 7:30 p.m., Oct. 29.

After the documentary, which will be shown on the second floor of the MARC Pavilion, a panel will discuss the Cuban opposition movement.

The panel will include Heidi Ewing, Dissident director, Vanessa Banzu, former South Florida Sun-Sentinel Cuba correspondent, and Manuel Vazquez, a journalist, writer and former political prisoner.

Students direct recycling awareness week

The ecology of South Florida class at the Bis-cayne Bay Campus, in collaboration with Students for Environmental Action, will be running a recycling awareness week beginning today and ending Friday, Nov. 2, to collect glass and plastic bottles and aluminum cans.

An information table will be set up at the location between the Graham Center and the Green Library. Students will have the opportunity to review the University’s Facility Management’s recycling program and the American College and University Presidents’ Climate Commitments, which President Modesto Maidique signed.

Compiled by Beacon Staff.

Owens Agosto
Staff Writer

The College Democrats and College Republicans, two political organizations at FIU with opposing views on various issues, usually schedule debates on campus to express their party’s ideals to the rest of the student body.

Their next debate, which will focus on education, will take place Nov. 6 at 10 a.m. in the Graham Center Pit.

Chris Cabral, president of the College Democrats, will be part of the debate. He said that the issues to be discussed most likely will focus on higher education.

"Aside from the fact that we are all college students, in this economy and society, education has never been more important," Cabral said.

"When the government cuts grants by millions of dollars, we need to make students aware.

The Republican Party believes that the government should have a limited role in education, which is something they will focus on during the debate.

"I don’t think someone in Washington should be making decisions about someone in Tulsa," said Janis Lockhat, president of the College Republicans, who will also be part of the debate. "I think those decisions can be more adequately made by someone local."

The Republican Party is also in favor of vouchers that use government funds to pay for students to attend private schools, giving parents the opportunity to send their children to the schools of their choice.

While Cabral said the vouchers take much needed funds away from the public school system, the Republicans disagree.

"In the limited amount of time that [the vouchers] have been in use, I think they have been pretty successful," Robaina said. "We should encourage programs that enhance education rather than stick to what we have. Personally, I’m not a big fan of mediocrity.”

Rather than taking students out of the public school system as a result of poor education, the Democratic Party believes that accountability is the key to the success. They feel the states, districts, schools, teachers, students and parents need to be held accountable and shut down the poorly performing schools. They also believe that there is a dire need to reduce class size, to modernize facilities and hire new teachers. All of these ideas will be brought up during the debate as well.

"We need to hold the government accountable for the way things are. Republican education in this country has obviously been a failure,” Cabral said.

Chris Khawad, president of Democracy for America, will also take part in the debate and will take the stance of the idea of in total privatization.

"Public schools are uncompetitive. If they’re bad schools, they will go out of business,” Kahawad said. "Only the best schools will survive.”

On Jan. 8, 2002, President George W. Bush signed the “No Child Left Behind Act,” which reauthorized a number of federal programs aiming to improve the performance of schools by increasing the standards of accountability and providing parents more freedom in choosing which schools their children will attend.

However, President Bush provided schools $27 billion less than he had promised.

Over the past three years, college tuitions have risen by 25 percent nationwide, pricing 20,000 students out of college. While then Florida Governor Jeb Bush promised to increase college aid, President Bush tried to change more for student loans and eliminate Pell Grants for 84,000 students.

On Oct. 12, Legislature approved cuts to financial aid available for college students, a topic that Cabral feels is essential to the debate.

Al Gore, potential Democratic candidate, has proposed a National Tuition Savings program to tie together state savings programs in more than 30 states so that parents can save for college tax-free.

They are proposing a tax cut that allows families to choose either a $10,000 a year tax deduction or a $2,800 tax credit.

Rather than base aid on those who exhibit financial need, the Republican Party votes to give financial aid to students who take more challenging courses in order to help colleges and universities improve their math and science departments. "The cuts are a mistake. FIU will be hit the hardest because half of our students receive financial aid," Cabral said.

The debate will be moderated by Jose Maya, assistant news director for student media and will be aired live on WRGP 88.1 FM and 95.3 FM.

NEWSFLASH

We need to hold the government accountable for the way things are. Republican education in this country has obviously been a failure.

Chris Cabral, President, College Democrats
Healthy eating options found on, near campus

SANDRA MATEU
Staff Writer

To Yolanda Santisteban, a nurse practitioner at the Biscayne Bay Campus’ student health clinic, the eating habits of young adults today are concerning.

“Students are eating whatever they can get in a short amount of time and for a low price without caring about what they are eating,” Santisteban said.

While choosing a place to eat on or off campus may be a hassle for some students due to time and money, Santisteban said quality should be the main factor to consider.

“More than picking where you eat, the key element is to pick what to eat,” Santisteban said.

There are many places on and off BBC that offer healthy choices within their high cholesterol and high sodium menus.

The BBC’s cafeteria on the second floor of the Wolfe University Center has juices, salads, soups, soups and wraps. Off campus, on Biscayne Boulevard, Subway offers additional choices such as soups, yogurts, apple slices and raisins.

Kenid Joseph, a journalism senior, eats at Subway to keep her body in good health.

“I normally have a salad or one of their healthy sandwiches,” Joseph said. “They have this nutrition guide and I just basically follow it because it tells me how many calories I’m taking in.”

Although Joseph is not on a diet, she has lost six pounds so far by eating healthy and going to the gym on campus.

“I call it a lifestyle change because I want to keep my body in good health,” said Joseph.

Off campus there is Starbucks Coffee and Jamba Juice. Although these places offer products that are high on sugar and carbohydrates, they also offer healthy food choices.

Jamba Juice, off of 135th Street and Biscayne Boulevard, offers healthy choices with the option of adding boosts to the drinks. These boosts are uniquely formulated to contain vitamins, minerals and functional ingredients blended to meet ones’ personal health, according to JambaJuice.com.

Starbucks Coffee provides different milk options and the choice of adding whipped cream or not.

They offer a variety of options for those who are counting calories, watching fat and sugar intakes or looking for more fiber and whole grains, according to Starbucks.com.

Heather Walker, a public relations senior, keeps her health in mind when eating.

“I try to eat as healthy as often as I can, but I don’t always succeed,” Walker said. “One of my weaknesses is a caramel frappuccino with whipped cream.”

Overall, Walker doesn’t worry about her weight.

“I don’t consider myself to be overweight or to be underweight. I’m at a healthy weight,” Walker said. “At 130 lbs I’m comfortable. I do think that I need to exercise more though.”

Restaurants near campus have healthy menus included in their regular menus.

Friday’s offers a healthy low carb, low fat menu that comprises appetizers, meals and even desserts aside from the regular menu’s salads and soups.

Pasha’s is another health conscious restaurant that has been recognized by several awards including “Best Place to eat if On South Beach Diet” by The Sun Post in 2004, “Best Healthy Fast Food” by Miami New Times in 2005, and “Best Healthy Fast Food” by The Sun Post in 2005. Their menu includes soups, salads and wraps.

Einstein Bros. Bagels, on 135th Street and Biscayne Boulevard, lists their nutritional guide on their Web site, www.einsteinbrothers.com. They offer salads and soups as alternatives for those watching their carbohydrate intake.

Santisteban also shared tips that can help healthy eaters when eating out such as asking for low-calorie foods, choosing oil and vinegar instead of house dressing and choosing vegetables instead of fried potatoes.

She also recommends bringing lunch from home.

“See what your body needs according to your activities, the prices and labels; try to find easy, healthy and economic recipes.”

Students talk first generation problems

FIRST, page 1

Cayo even said that he got more out of college because the experience was all new.

“I feel more independent because I did things on my own,” said Celinda Miranda, a senior studying public relations.

Miranda moved into Panther Hall during her first semester. Big things like selecting classes were not the problem, small things like studying were, Miranda said.

“I had someone to guide her, she would have taken classes more seriously, Miranda said. Like many other first generation students, Miranda found it hard to explain university life to her parents.

Another similarity between first generation students seems to be that their families don’t pressure them as harshly as it would be expected. There is a certain amount of pressure but it is more focused on actually finishing college rather than how the students finish college. However, the parent’s lack of understanding leads to high expectations.

“My family expected me to be done in four years,” said Miranda. “They didn’t understand that this college isn’t like high school.”

Despite the difficulties, first generation students share the pride of being the first in their family to go to a college or a university.

There is also a common feeling of serving as inspiration for younger members of their family.

“I wouldn’t change the experience [as a first generation student] for anything. Although there are some weekends I’d like to forget,” Klopp said chuckling.

LEARNING ETIQUETTE

Contemporary Style of Eating

DOS AND DON’TS: Speaker, Jacqueline Whitmore, from the Protocol School of Palm Beach County discusses how to dine like a diplomat and impress potential employers at a dinner interview, as well as provide tips on proper business etiquette.

CAMPUS TALK

Reactions to the University’s pledge to be more green

Stefan Lai
Freshman
“I think it’s a great idea, especially with the awareness of global warming. It goes well with today’s state of consciousness.”

Omar Talbot
Junior
“It’s better for our future. I’m not thinking in terms of the whole Earth, but at least in our community it’s great to get involved.”

Naty Vera
Freshman
“If IUI makes included activities, then we can influence others around the world to save our future.”

Contact Us
Edith Sernio
BBC Managing Editor
beaconcsb@yahoo.com

October 29, 2007
OPINION

Take caution, no one is immune to rape

Earlier this week, an FIU student woke up naked and bloodied next to a man she went home with the night before. The alleged rapist, Gary Zerola, a former Boston, Mass., defense attorney, was charged with sexual battery.

He evidently forced her to take unknown pills and raped her while she was unconscious, completely vulnerable.

Although taking the proper precautions to reduce the chance of rape, the student never imagined she would be a victim—no one does. No one ever expects to be raped.

But maybe that’s the problem—we don’t accept that we are potential victims of rape, therefore we don’t take precautions to avoid it. We need to, because no one—men, children, or women—is free from the horrific prospect.

The occurrence of sexual assault and rape is still high, indicating that many people do not safeguard themselves properly. In 2004-2005 alone, “there was an estimated 17,000,000 permanent victims of rape, attempted rape or sexual assault,” according to the Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network (RAINN).

It is not possible to identify a rape— it is very possible to weaken the chances of becoming a victim. To begin with, don’t have the mind-set that rape is not a possibility, especially when “every two to a half minutes, somewhere in America, someone is sexually assaulted,” according to RAINN.

Next, do not allow yourself to be vulnerable among acquaintances without a family member or close friend nearby. The Pennsylvania Coalition Against Rape (PCAR) confirms “7 in 10 rape and sexual assault victims know their attacker prior to the assault. If the FIU student had a friend with her to contact, she could have avoided the assault.

And contrary to the belief that only women can be raped, the student never imagined that she would be a victim of rape.

The consequences from this ordeal are endless; she may never be able to trust another man or might require weekly therapy sessions. The FIU student may have to be treated for the rest of her life, and “chances that a woman will develop post-traumatic stress disorder after being raped are between 50 percent and 95 percent.”

Rape can affect anyone, regardless of race or sex. It’s consequences are irreversible and lifelong. By simply following a few precautionary steps, one can lessen their chances of becoming another statistic, another victim.

In the past year, there has been a rise in hate crimes and documented racism in schools, the likes of which has not been seen since the Civil Rights movement of the 1950s and ’60s. And even more, many of these acts have involved students. Among them, a racially-motivated attack on three FIU students in September.

Lately the news has been showing the public with reports regarding racism and one case with such thinly veiled racism, epitomizing the recent surge in hate crimes: the Jena 6.

While the allegations against these six black students isn’t alarming new, the fact that this is happening in America’s schools is just one piece of evidence that we, as a nation, are not as tolerant as we would like to believe.

The attack on the Jena 6 is not an isolated event and the alleged hate crime right across from Cooper City High School is just one example of many attacks in the Tri-County area alone.

The number of hate crimes in schools is on a seemingly astronomical rise: 13.5 percent of all reported hate crimes occurred in schools in 2005 according to the U.S. Department of Justice, and have since almost tripled as of August 2007. Also 54.7 percent of these attacks are racially motivated.

Hate crimes are not only classified by race-related events: hate crimes can also be classified by attacks against the disabled, homosexuals, people of varying religious beliefs, and just about any ‘difference’ a person could have.

In Washington, D.C., in early October, a black student was attacked at the Model Secondary School for the Deaf. The students were beaten and then with a marker were covered with racial slurs and writings of “KKK” and variations of a swastika. This incident was not only racially motivated, but also aimed at the handicapped students of this school, according to the Metro Police.

No suspects have been identified but this is just one of many very brutal, unsolved attacks in the D.C. area. It’s not that the sixth highest number of reported incidents in 2005, with 231 reported incidents, and, as speculated, has since reached a higher standing on this list as of early 2007, occurring mostly in the Miami-Dade and Broward counties area, arguably the most economically and racially diverse areas in the state.

Upon reading these reports and living in these areas, one might assume it’s not as rampant as all the news reports entail it to be but does that mean it’s nonexistent? Is it possible that Miami is living proof that ignorance is bliss? Unfortunately, it seems as such. It’s more than plausible that South Florida’s residents are more than accustomed to living in such a racially and economically divided area that we don’t realize this is not how things are everywhere else.

How many times have you or your friends driven though Opa Locka or Liberty City and been afraid to step foot out of the car because you’re not of the ‘proper race’ to be seen in public?

Is it because you think you’ll be robbed because you’re white or Hispanic in a black neighborhood?

Conversely, would a black resident feel the same way driving into a city like Davie or Plantation because of Broward town’s reputations of being filled with ‘rednecks’ and ‘southerners’? But that is the case.

This isn’t happening only here, but South Florida is a prime example of how ‘harmless’ stereotypes are truly less-than-subtle forms of racism and a modern form of segregation, with citizens willingly moving into predominantly black, white, or Hispanic neighborhoods.

We are furthering ourselves from being one community rather than hundreds of socio-economically divided communities and, consequently, it’s this practice of sticking together and fear-mongering via increasingly hostile stereotypes that allow hate crimes to happen.

Extinguishing racism and other forms of discrimination is not plausible and very unlikely to improve any time soon, it shouldn’t be expected that we, as a society, are doing this ourselves, and that maybe being ‘color-blind’ isn’t the answer either, that we need to embrace our differences accept other peoples’ as well.

Only then can we truly call ourselves a community.

Racial hostility affecting schools

JOSEPH MARHEE
Staff Writer

In the past year, there has been a rise in hate crimes and documented racism in schools, the likes of which has not been seen since the Civil Rights movement of the 1950s and ’60s. And even more, many of these acts have involved students. Among them, a racially-motivated attack on three FIU students in September.

Lately the news has been showing the public with reports regarding racism and one case with such thinly veiled racism, epitomizing the recent surge in hate crimes: the Jena 6.

While the allegations against these six black students isn’t alarming new, the fact that this is happening in America’s schools is just one piece of evidence that we, as a nation, are not as tolerant as we would like to believe.

The attack on the Jena 6 is not an isolated event and the alleged hate crime right across from Cooper City High School is just one example of many attacks in the Tri-County area alone.

The number of hate crimes in schools is on a seemingly astronomical rise: 13.5 percent of all reported hate crimes occurred in schools in 2005 according to the U.S. Department of Justice, and have since almost tripled as of August 2007. Also 54.7 percent of these attacks are racially motivated.

Hate crimes are not only classified by race-related events: hate crimes can also be classified by attacks against the disabled, homosexuals, people of varying religious beliefs, and just about any ‘difference’ a person could have.

In Washington, D.C., in early October, a black student was attacked at the Model Secondary School for the Deaf. The students were beaten and then with a marker were covered with racial slurs and writings of “KKK” and variations of a swastika. This incident was not only racially motivated, but also aimed at the handicapped students of this school, according to the Metro Police.

No suspects have been identified but this is just one of many very brutal, unsolved attacks in the D.C. area. It’s not that the sixth highest number of reported incidents in 2005, with 231 reported incidents, and, as speculated, has since reached a higher standing on this list as of early 2007, occurring mostly in the Miami-Dade and Broward counties area, arguably the most economically and racially diverse areas in the state.

Upon reading these reports and living in these areas, one might assume it’s not as rampant as all the news reports entail it to be but does that mean it’s nonexistent? Is it possible that Miami is living proof that ignorance is bliss? Unfortunately, it seems as such. It’s more than plausible that South Florida’s residents are more than accustomed to living in such a racially and economically divided area that we don’t realize this is not how things are everywhere else.

How many times have you or your friends driven though Opa Locka or Liberty City and been afraid to step foot out of the car because you’re not of the ‘proper race’ to be seen in public?

Is it because you think you’ll be robbed because you’re white or Hispanic in a black neighborhood?

Conversely, would a black resident feel the same way driving into a city like Davie or Plantation because of Broward town’s reputations of being filled with ‘rednecks’ and ‘southerners’? But that is the case.

This isn’t happening only here, but South Florida is a prime example of how ‘harmless’ stereotypes are truly less-than-subtle forms of racism and a modern form of
Colbert assures patriotism increase after his read

ERIC FELDMAN
Staff Writer

A new book by a college favorite for the presidency has recently been published. No, it was not Barack Obama’s “The Audacity of Hope,” but Stephen Colbert’s “I Am America (And So Can You!).”

It is difficult for supporters of Colbert to pass up the book on a shelf and not purchase it, especially considering its endorsement by the “Stephen T. Colbert Award for the Literary Excellence.” Colbert has plenty of supporters. The Facebook group “Colbert for President” has more than 32,000 members, which isn’t bad for someone who is not even running (except as a joke in his home state).

So, he is popular, but is his latest parody of works by political pundits worth the read? Colbert often invokes God as rationale for following the concepts in his book; the deity even makes an appearance in a sidebar entitled “Stephen Speaks for Me” in which the Almighty praises Colbert for the excellent chapter on religion. The other underlying theme is how doing everything Colbert tells you will make you a better American. In fact, opening the cover of the book will make you “25 percent more patriotic,” according to Colbert.

The book is amusing. Colbert’s self-serving sections up his work into chapters that cover all aspects of American life, from “The Familiar,” “Old People” to “Religion.” He also explains why you need to live your life your way or go to Hell.

McCalla said that she dressed up as a nurse one Halloween and was only able to get away with the outfit by borrowing a stethoscope and several other medical tools from a friend who worked in the medical field. “I try to borrow as much stuff from friends as possible,” McCalla said. “Sometimes you’ll be amazed at what your friends have so you don’t have to purchase materials or accessories for a costume.”

Another time, she dressed up as Madonna from her “Like a Virgin” music video. Since she couldn’t find a wedding dress and didn’t want to spend a fortune purchasing a wedding gown, she simply wore a white mini-skirt and finger-less gloves, with a lacy top and bra underneath.

The idea behind creating your own Halloween costume is originality, wit and saving money. Here are a couple of costume ideas that should only cost between $5-$10.

A new book by a college favorite for the presidency has recently been published. No, it was not Barack Obama’s “The Audacity of Hope,” but Stephen Colbert’s “I Am America (And So Can You!).”

It is difficult for supporters of Colbert to pass up the book on a shelf and not purchase it, especially considering its endorsement by the “Stephen T. Colbert Award for the Literary Excellence.” Colbert has plenty of supporters. The Facebook group “Colbert for President” has more than 32,000 members, which isn’t bad for someone who is not even running (except as a joke in his home state).

So, he is popular, but is his latest parody of works by political pundits worth the read? Colbert often invokes God as rationale for following the concepts in his book; the deity even makes an appearance in a sidebar entitled “Stephen Speaks for Me” in which the Almighty praises Colbert for the excellent chapter on religion. The other underlying theme is how doing everything Colbert tells you will make you a better American. In fact, opening the cover of the book will make you “25 percent more patriotic,” according to Colbert.

The book is amusing. Colbert’s self-serving sections up his work into chapters that cover all aspects of American life, from “The Familiar,” “Old People” to “Religion.” He also explains why you need to live your life your way or go to Hell.

McCalla said that she dressed up as a nurse one Halloween and was only able to get away with the outfit by borrowing a stethoscope and several other medical tools from a friend who worked in the medical field. “I try to borrow as much stuff from friends as possible,” McCalla said. “Sometimes you’ll be amazed at what your friends have so you don’t have to purchase materials or accessories for a costume.”

Another time, she dressed up as Madonna from her “Like a Virgin” music video. Since she couldn’t find a wedding dress and didn’t want to spend a fortune purchasing a wedding gown, she simply wore a white mini-skirt and finger-less gloves, with a lacy top and bra underneath.

The idea behind creating your own Halloween costume is originality, wit and saving money. Here are a couple of costume ideas that should only cost between $5-$10.

COUPLES’ COSTUMES

For the following couples’ costumes, the roles can always be reversed.

BUTTERFLY AND BUTTERFLY CATCHER: She dresses up as a butterfly catcher (khaki shirt and shorts, a safari hat, boots and a butterfly net). He dresses up in a big red heart (cut out of cardboard or cloth) and wears handcuffs. He dresses like a cop.

UPS DRIVER AND HIS OR HER PACKAGE: He dresses up in a dark brown button-down short-sleeved shirt, and brown shorts, with a large UPS logo on the pocket. She wears a large box, wrapped in brown paper, with holes cut for head and arms.

For additional costume ideas, visit http://www.familyeducation.com or http://costumedizarre.com.
This past summer five dedicated FIU students began scripting a constitution and a mission statement; working toward approval from the Student Organization Council to get their club going. In August the students got what they wanted and a branch of Music Saves Lives (MSL) was created at FIU.

A former Red Cross employee and avid music fan, Russel Hornbeek, founded Music Saves Lives in November 2005. His intention was to gather people based on a common interest, music, who are willing to donate blood to patients and prolong their lives.

Two years have passed and the organization has found its way to some high schools and colleges. According to Vice President Rosalyn Delgado, MSL is a concept of merging service with music in order to come together for a common cause, whether it is to raise funds for cancer research, have bone marrow registry drives for DKMS Americas or simply just to bring members and the music community together.

The club’s first unofficial event was a one week blood drive where donors had the opportunity to donate and receive one free concert ticket and all access backstage pass to the Vans Warped Tour 2007. They were able to have 300 donors and save 600 lives. As a new club under SOC the group has encountered some obstacles along the way – financial and with time-management.

“IT’s hard to do anything without money and all the officers are full time students. This makes it hard for all of us to be present at all times, but somehow we have managed to be there when we need to,” said President of MSL Jackie Gadea.

Angel Garcia, advisor for MSL, wants to help the group grow and to establish its name on campus.

“My goal is to take all my experiences – from being involved here at FIU to being a student leader to now being a professional – giving my knowledge and as much research and guidance as I can,” said Garcia. “I also want to give them everything I got as far as knowledge and motivating members and just the tools of success to lead a such a big club as [MSL].”

Some other goals the group plans on achieving this school year are establishing its name around campus and retaining membership.

Gadea plans to accomplish this goal by building upon the relationships they already have in the music industry, tabling in the Graham Center and working with other on-campus philanthropies and organizations.

Other officers who have taken part in organizing and bringing MSL on campus are Michael Thomas, Noor Daghistani and Lauren Agosto.

Together, during meetings, they bring a comfortable and enjoyable atmosphere and have members speak their minds and share ideas.

To become official members students must pay a one time $10 fee used for member shirts and basic club expenses. At the end of the semester members must obtain 20 points to establish active status. Points are obtained by attending service events, blood drives and socials.

Current sophomore and MSL member Luis Rivera was one of the first people to find out information on MSL during Club Fair Week. As a new member he’s looking forward to many events and projects with the club.

“IT looks forward to great times and saving lives. It doesn’t matter if I get recognition as long as the patients are able to continue living and able to live a prosperous life.”

Meetings are held every other Wed. in GC 140 or GC 241. For more information on Music Saves Lives contact TeamMiami@MusicSavesLives.com.

WINNER: Adam Bolanos, winner of Golden Idol 2007, sings “One Song Glory” from RENT for judges Luis Gomez, professor from the school of music, Cedric McMinn “Mr. FIU” and Patty Temino, associate director for center for leadership and service. Golden Idol is a charity of event held by dance marathon to raise money for the Miami Children’s Hospital fund.
The success of Britney Spears’ heavily produced single “Gimme More” has given the ubiquitous Spears a presence on the radio charts that she hasn’t had in years. Arguably, not since Madonna has America had a pop star with Spears’ level of notoriety, making it all too easy to focus on everything but the music.

While Madonna took an aggressive approach to her public persona, in the age of blogging and viral networking, all Spears has to do to end up on everyone’s coffee table is walk barefoot.

This time around though, her secret weapon is not an umbrella, but producer Nate “Danja” Hills – and when he swings, it’s a hit. Blackout has style, sex, sass and swagger to spare. Spears teases, giggles and pants her way through the tracks with breathy come-ons, occasionally sounding forced but mostly it’s a style that’s distinctly her own.

Swedish production team Bloodshy & Avant, the masterminds behind her hit “Toxic” from In The Zone, return to her side with tracks like “Radar,” a future-pop song that bounces along to an actual radar-blip sound effect that borders on gimmicky but sounds like it could be a club staple.

Spears cranks up her libido more than a dog in heat, and her producers ward off any sign of a refractory period by delivering the slickest of slick hip-hop beats and all the electronic bells, whistles and pink streamers you’d expect from a pop album of this stature.

At times, though, like on the ode to Spears’ love for pole-dancing, “Get Naked (I Got a Plan),” the production becomes so thick and overbearing that her vocal performances sound more like an afterthought, becoming twisted, chopped up and dressed up.

Blackout has a convincing charm, however: Spears sounds like she’s definitely having more fun than you, and she’s being more sonically adventurous than in any of her previous albums, but it’s still just plastic pop. Stand-out track “Toy Soldier” has drums that fire off like a pink Uzi with Britney delivering the lyrics in a sexy drawl that really makes the song.

Spears’ playful self-awareness, like on the rumored second single “Piece of Me,” gives the album its legs and personality, even if it is penned by hired hands.

She sings “I’m Mrs. Lifestyles of the rich and famous/I’m Mrs. Oh-my-God that Britney’s shameless/I’m Mrs. Extra! Extra! This just in/Mrs. She’s too big, now she’s too thin.”

Frequent acknowledgments of “goin’ crazy,” being a freak, looking insane and “falling off the edge of my mind” may make you grin, but Spears wears the labels proudly and elevates her like any pair of knee-high diamond studded boots.

Ultimately, the album works because the tracks feel like they naturally play off each other. The album’s title that has everyone snickering supposedly refers to “blacking out negativity and embracing life”—okay Britney, real cute.

It’s not explicitly a concept album, and everything here is about as profound as a puddle, but Blackout plays through briskly, and is insistent on entertaining without ever succumbing to filler.

Spears has faced the kind of scrutiny that can paralyze even the most talented stars, but fortunately for her and her listeners, what was preceded by a series of bitter events ends in this very sweet album.
SHANNON FALLON
Staff Writer

A wise man once said, “right selection is to protect your erection.” He was probably referring to the students to protect themselves. However, according to a study conducted by Troyan, students lack sexual awareness because they do not consider before choosing the contraceptive program.

“Few women know their own anatomy that is the said. “They don’t know their inside to feel their cervix,” she said. “I don’t know what to do anymore. Troyan also contacted the Wellness Center about conducting the study.”

The Wellness Center offers a number of tests to students via appointments; free contracections are also available.

“Condom currently has a grant for free childbirth and gonorrhea testing and we also do free HIV testing,” she said. “I don’t know what else to do. I practically throw condoms in students’ faces in order to get them involved in all the outreach programs that we offer.”

Troyan conducts a study each year called the Sexual Report Card. The study analyzes sexual health programs offered throughout American colleges and universities.

This year, 139 schools participated in the study and were graded on a number of topics such as sexual health awareness programs, contraception availability, HIV testing and lecture outreach programs; FIU ranked 88 out of 139 schools.

Casandra Roache, senior health educator at the University Park Wellness Center does not agree with the study, however.

“We do not have lack of sexual health awareness, not on the Wellness Center’s part,” Roache said. “What we have is a walking problem. Everyone at FIU is too lazy to walk over to the Wellness Center or the Student Health Center, and they can have a Pap smear check-up for $25 and be tested for HIV for no charge.”

According to Troyan’s study, lack of information and resources is partially to blame for FIU’s poor score, but Roache is puzzled as to where Troyan obtained its information – she was not contacted.

Regardless of the implications of the study, student Jenna Stone likes to stay aware on sexual health issues.

“I keep myself informed on sexual health issues and even use the Wellness Center from time to time,” Stone said. “I don’t need to be catching anything that makes me itch, blister or [that is] life threatening.”

Students make use of condoms, birth control

OLIVIA SARRACINO
Contributing Writer

With a 90 and a 53 percent increase in 2002, the condom and the birth control pill, are both commonly known as a method of contraception, effective and women can have access to.

Both contraceptives prevent pregnancies, but the condom is the only one that can protect partners from HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases.

Donna Weidema, an advanced registered nurse practitioner at FIU’s University Health Services, said that the most important thing for someone to consider before choosing the right contraceptive is knowing that their own body aside from their partner’s.

“Few women know their own anatomy that is the number one mistake of young people,” she said.

The second step is to learn about the advantages and disadvantages of each method of contraception.

“Personally, when I was choosing my contraceptive, after the right contraceptive is knowing what he thought was best for me, I went online and I looked up things I hadn’t heard and, I tried researching it myself,” said Wilma Torrero Sa’s public assistant of the immunizations department. “When I was done I went back to my doctor and told him what I had found, we came to a mutual decision.”

The American College Health Association has a list of more than 15 contraceptives, including the condom and the pill. The list includes: the shot, Depo-Provera; contraceptive patch, Evra; intrauterine ring, Nuva; and Intrauterine devices, among others.

Depo-Provera contains progesterone, a hormone that prevents a woman’s uterus for the fertilized ovum and maintains pregnancy; but this contraceptive actually inhibits sperm penetration by changes cervical mucus. Meant to be taken every three months, not only is this form of contraception ineffective and women do not menstruate for three months while using it, Weidema said.

“We love it or they hate it. Because it’s a non-thinker, people like it,” Weidema said. “I have some students that don’t want to get pregnant; they’ve had it for two to three years.”

On the other hand, Depo-Provera, like other contraceptives, can have its disadvantages. It doesn’t protect against HIV or STD’s, and it can cause irregular bleeding and weight gain. “My friend had the shot, she gained 50 pounds in a year, and it was hard to put off,” said Wilma Torrero Sa’s public assistant of the immunizations department. “It’s the hardest weight to put off.”

Evra, the contraceptive patch, is worn on the skin and contains both progesterone and estrogen, the female sex hormone. Like with Depo-Provera, the American College Health Association said that the patch, “also creates a thick mucus in the cervix and thin endometrium (lining tissue of the uterus) which interfere with sperm motility and implantation.”

This contraceptive does not intervene with sexual intercourse, decreases menstrual cramps and may improve acne. But, Evra can also have its negative side: headaches, nausea, depression, decreased sex drive, no HIV or STD protection and weight gain.

Weidema says that the Nuva ring is better than the birth control pill because a lot of women forget to take their pills.

The Nuva may protect women from ectopic pregnancy, or the development of a fertilized egg outside of the uterus, and reduces menstruation, among other benefits, Weidema said.

“The Nuva ring as far as I understand, doesn’t have any side effects, the only one is the possibility of slipping out,” Sanchez said. “I was on it and there were no mood side effects, my periods remained regular.”

However, like Evra, the ring also includes the same risks, including skin irritation and difficulty trying to get pregnant after being used.

IUD copper is a small device in the shape of an “T” that damages the function of sperm. Weidema said this device is implanted in a woman in a gynecologist’s office, it is not a procedure done at FIU.

The “copper-T” needs no special preparation before intercourse, no daily attention, can last up to 10 years and is reversible.

However, it may cause cramping, more bleeding, bleeding in between periods and no HIV or STD protection.

Other methods of contraceptives include: spermicides, the diaphragm and cervical cap, withdrawal, periodic abstinence, abstinence and sterilization.

At times, students believe that the only solution is the condom or “the pill.”

“Think those are the only two methods they would use, any other alternative they don’t have access to,” said Sidney Emmanuel, a computer engineering major. “They don’t know or don’t have access to it.”

Students can find more information about contraceptives in the Wellness Center or at the Student Health Center, and they can have a Pap smear check-up for $25 and be tested for HIV for no charge.

“We do HIV testing at the Wellness Center, they are available to anybody, even if you are not a student, staff or faculty member, just anybody within the community,” Sanchez said. “It’s completely free and it’s completely anonymous.”

Report shows students lack sexual awareness
New commercial shows Dwyane Wade before pro success

TIM REYNOLDS
AP Wire

Dwyane Wade never intended for these words to become public.

They were the innermost thoughts of the Miami Heat’s star guard, quickly typed into his e-mail device during a private moment in a New York hotel room this summer, all off the top of his head.

No editing, no revising, no concerns about spelling or punctuation or grammar.

“You said I needed to become a man and that I counted on you way too much... so you left me feeling unsure, unloved and confused,” Wade wrote, expressing sentiments that he’d carried around for years. “How could you not love me anymore?”

Some of his relatives and closest confidants soon read what he had typed. And closest confidants soon understood me—but I knew almost everyone had absolutely no idea what he was talking about. A woman? A parent? A friend?

“It shaped him,” said Tom Crean, his coach at Marquette. “It made him feel as if he just couldn’t measure up. ‘There’s no doubt that he got injured and fired up and worked,’” Heat coach Pat Riley said. “There’s no doubt that year helped him get to where he is today.”

That year, Wade said, was pure agony.

“It shaped him,” said Tom Crean, his coach at Marquette. “It made him appreciate everything so much more as time went on and made him focus so much better, because now, he had to deal with the fact that there was nothing compared to basketball when it came to having glory and having so much success.”

Crean has nothing but the highest praise for Wade, and cringes when recalling what happened when he saw stories suggesting that the guard from Robbins, Ill., couldn’t handle college academically.

“One of the top anger moments in my life is when an article came out that questioned him academically and how much he struggled,” Crean said. “I’ll never forget that because it was so wrong. He did so well here. He never struggled here. He was always flourishing here.”

And that was the case for one simple reason: Basketball depended on it.

“The commercial doesn’t have much dialogue, and doesn’t need it. It begins with the arena dark and Wade walking through a hallway. He enters through the tunnel the Heat use to take the floor at home games, tapping his hand twice against a photo that’s part of a collage of championship moments from those 2006 finals against Dallas, the series he dominated to win MVP honors. He’s in workout gear, trots onto the hardwood and begins to skip around. There is no ball and no one else in the building. He heads to the top of the key and pummels the act of taking one jump shot, then another before hopping around in a tight circle and looking toward the empty seats.

The message is simple: He’s simply overjoyed to be on the floor.

“You were the one that understood me, I knew deep down inside you were gonna come back to me,” Wade wrote. “So I practiced on ways that I could love you more, and for you to never leave me again. And then 2001-2002 came... you said the words that I’ve always dreamed of hearing...”

He now heads up the steps of the arena, takes his seat in a press box high above the court and flips on a microphone, intense look on his face, and delivers the only words in the spot.

“From Robbins, Illinois, 6-foot-4 guard Dwyane Wade,”

That’s how he was introduced at Marquette in the 2001-02 season, his first one back in the game.

Wade is sitting on a couch in a dressing room at the arena now, taking a break from filming the commercial. Someone has brought in Chinese food for lunch. A trainer is massaging his calf, and Wade decides the time is right to talk about how the ode went from thoughts to text.

“My brother wrote something about basketball and I liked it. It was nice,” Wade said. “So I said, ‘I’m going to go in my room and write something.’ And I wound up writing about my year without basketball, one of the biggest years in my life.”

Some people suspected the letter was about last season, when he missed much of later portions with a dislocated shoulder and wasn’t healthy enough to be a major factor in the postseason that saw Miami swept out of the first round by the Chicago Bulls.

It had nothing to do with that.

Sure, losing the NBA title hurt, but nothing like that year away from the game. And now, seven years later, Wade is no longer shy about holding his feelings back about that point in his life.

“The year I couldn’t play, it hurt my pride,” Wade said. “It hurt me to watch my team go through a 15-14 season without me. I wanted to prove myself and why I went to Marquette, when a lot of people didn’t know where it even was. For a year, I was forgotten. And I don’t ever want to be forgotten again.”

REPEAT OFFENDER: Sophomore preseason All-American Yarimar Rosa was selected as the Sun Belt Conference Player Of The Week (POTW) for the week ending Oct. 22. It was her second time being selected as the conference POTW, and her 4th time in her career. She has been the most decorated athlete on the team, with no other’s being selected for the honor this season.

CLASSIFIEDS

JOBS

Movie Extras. New opportunities for upcoming productions. All looks needed no experience required for cast calls. Call 877-218-6224

Undercover Shoppers Earn up to $150 per day. Under cover shoppers needed to judge retail and dining establishments Exp. Not Req. Call 800-722-4791

General Office. North Miami Distributor. Flexible hours. $9.50 an hour. 786-314-1840

FIU SPORTS

OCTOBER 26

Women’s Soccer vs. Arkansas State (7:00 p.m.) Miami, Fl

OCTOBER 27

Men’s Soccer vs. Kentucky (7:30 p.m.) Miami, Fl

Football vs. Arkansas (7 p.m.) Fayetteville, Ark.

OCTOBER 28

Women’s Soccer vs. UALR (1:00 p.m.) Miami, Fl

CONFERENCES

FOR RENT

Apartment for rent 1101 SW 122 Ave new Florida International University $1250 / Month, 2 Bedrooms, 2 Baths (Kitchen, Dining Room & Living Room) Also Included: Wrap-Around Balcony with view to pool

Contact: Juan V. Guzmenez 305-322-7548 or Jose Perez 786-399-1840

OCTOBER 28

Women’s Soccer vs. UALR (1:00 p.m.) Miami, Fl

Home games in bold
The newest stadium in Florida is the Brighthouse Networks Coliseum (left) in Orlando, home of the UCF Knights, which opened this season against a loss to Texas. FIU's stadium (right) is under construction and is schedule to open in the 2008 season against the USF Bulls.

Cristobal could follow in Leavitt's footsteps with FIU

Team begins conditioning for season

Junior Jorge Ramos pitched the last three innings as Team British Columbia could only muster six total hits off the Golden Panthers’ pitching staff.

With so much more time until the start of the regular season, FIU will continue to train in different ways.

Thomas mentioned how the players will right now focus on strength and conditioning before they polish their skills for the season.

"Guys will lift weights three days a week and take a part in our conditioning program," he said. "We are not just preparing for the opening game, but the grind of the whole season."

For now, the Golden Panthers will enjoy both the victory and the different competition. The Turtle Thomas era for the FIU baseball team will officially begin in only four months against the University of Southern California on Feb. 22.

FLORIDA’S D-1A SCHOOLS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>School</th>
<th>Overall</th>
<th>Conf</th>
<th>Coach</th>
<th>Harris</th>
<th>BCS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>South Florida</td>
<td>6-1</td>
<td>2-2</td>
<td>12</td>
<td>12</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Florida</td>
<td>5-2</td>
<td>1-1</td>
<td>11</td>
<td>9</td>
<td>11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miami</td>
<td>5-3</td>
<td>2-2</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>FSU</td>
<td>4-3</td>
<td>1-3</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>UCF</td>
<td>4-3</td>
<td>2-1</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>FAU</td>
<td>4-3</td>
<td>3-0</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>FIU</td>
<td>0-7</td>
<td>0-3</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

All records up to date as of Oct. 27

Unfortunately, it even took Leavitt 10 years to build his program to where it is now, so FIU fans are going to have to be patient.

But don’t be surprised if in a few years, FIU and Cristobal become a media sensation like USF and Leavitt. It’s just going to take some time.

JOIN OUR STAFF!

The BEACON is always looking for talented and reliable individuals to join the staff. If you have an interest in writing, photography or even grammar, don’t be shy. Stop by one of our offices located in GC 210 and WUC 124.
FOLLOW THE LEADER

Golden Panthers’ football needs to follow precedent set by USF; other Florida schools

Luca Messina
Staff Writer

The baseball team dominated in its rain-soaked exhibition game against Team British Columbia 11-2 Oct. 25 at University Park Stadium. The game was marked by timely hits and an abundance of errors by the opposition.

Florida State University and the University of Miami, once proud programs who are in the midst of mediocre seasons, are above .500. F SU was even receiving votes in the Top-25 poll up until last week.

Then you have FIU. You see the skeleton of a stadium that is being planned to hold what is, at this point, a skeleton of a good football program.

You walk around campus and see a sea of blue, orange, green, and bur- gundy, representing the colors of every- one’s favorite non-FIU schools, and you hope that one day, these stu- dents will don the gold and blue and watch their school in that new stadium.

Despite the lack of support from the student population, you go down to a football practice and you don’t see play- ers dogging it in practice and you don’t see the coaching stuff taking it easy in the middle of the team’s second straight lost season.

The players and the coaches understand that getting to the next level with the rest of the state isn’t an easy task, but it is possible if they try and follow the path laid out by the rest of the other schools.

It’s probably not easy to see similarities between USF and FIU. On the one hand, you have a current, Top-15 ranked team with a nationally ranked defense and on the other you have, w e l l . . . FIU.

How- ever, many people forget that just three sea-

The men’s and women’s teams begin kick off their season Nov. 3 with an exhibition game against Barr University.

FOOTBALL, page 11

Team downs Canadian amateurs in exhibition game

LUCA MESSINA
Staff Writer

The baseball team dominated in its rain-soaked exhibition game against Team British Columbia 11-2 Oct. 25 at University Park Stadium. The game was marked by timely hits and an abundance of errors by the opposition.

British Columbia’s squad consisted of mainly 17- and 18-year-old high school seniors looking to get exposure at the college level. FIU’s first-year coach Turtle Thomas organized the early exhibition as he has a mutual relationship with British Columbia’s coach Doug Matheson.

“I met him last year when I was at Arizona State as I recruited a lot his players,” Thomas said. “He’s a great guy and has a players-first mentality, which is great.”

FIU would get a lead it wouldn’t relinquish early on after scoring four first-inning runs.

Three of those runs came on costly BC errors, while one came on an RBI double by freshman designated hitter Javier Sujo.

Sujo would finish the game 4-for-5 with two RBI.

In the third inning, the Golden Panthers would add three more runs, making it 7-0, after an error and three hits. The lead was all FIU would need as Corey Polizzano dominated on the mound.

The sophomore finished with four innings pitched, seven strikeouts, three walks and one hit allowed.

The rest of the game was marked by a run in every inning except the eighth as FIU clearly overpowered a young team with 13 hits.

“What I liked was the number of at- bats we got and the two-out hits,” Thomas said. “A lot of leadoff guys got on and we used the field goal.

This was the first game-like situation the team has participated in under its new coach.

“It was good to finally play someone with a different colored jersey; it’s like a break in the action for us,” Thomas said.

The game was played with two 15-minute halves and a women’s basketball was used.

The women’s team competed in the men’s side.

Darren Collette
Staff writer

The Golden Panther Arena hosted the Tip-Off Classic on Oct. 24, a co-ed basketball game between the men’s and women’s basketball teams.

In the end the white-clad team coached by women’s head coach Cindy Russo won 62-52 over men’s head coach Sergio Rouco’s blue team.

The game was played with two 15-minute halves and a women’s basketball was used.

Most of the women’s team competed in the men’s side.

The other members of the team were in late classes and unable to suit up.

The game started out with the white team taking an early lead they would never lose. They were led by Galindo, who put up the most points on the night with 21.

Some of the players had some fun with the game, including Chris Fuller of the blue team attempting to block a free throw by the white team.

The men and women seemed to play pretty well together despite seldom running full court games with each other.

“I think this event is great,” Galindo said. “It gives fans a chance to see both teams at the same time. Hopefully next year and in the future we can do the same thing.”

Before the game, FIU students were offered some free food in front of the arena while members of the FIU athletic department, basketball coaches and most of the basketball players attended a dinner and silent auction inside the arena.

The men’s and women’s teams begin kick off their season Nov. 3 with an exhibition game against Barry University.

BASEBALL, page 11

Co-ed exhibition game gives players chance to show off skills

Darren Collette
Staff writer

The Golden Panther Arena hosted the Tip-Off Classic on Oct. 24, a co-ed basketball game between the men’s and women’s basketball teams.

In the end the white-clad team coached by women’s head coach Cindy Russo won 62-52 over men’s head coach Sergio Rouco’s blue team.

The game was played with two 15-minute halves and a women’s basketball was used.

Most of the women’s team competed in the men’s side.

The other members of the team were in late classes and unable to suit up.

The game started out with the white team taking an early lead they would never lose. They were led by Galindo, who put up the most points on the night with 21.

Some of the players had some fun with the game, including Chris Fuller of the blue team attempting to block a free throw by the white team.

The men and women seemed to play pretty well together despite seldom running full court games with each other.

“I think this event is great,” Galindo said. “It gives fans a chance to see both teams at the same time. Hopefully next year and in the future we can do the same thing.”

Before the game, FIU students were offered some free food in front of the arena while members of the FIU athletic department, basketball coaches and most of the basketball players attended a dinner and silent auction inside the arena.

The men’s and women’s teams begin kick off their season Nov. 3 with an exhibition game against Barry University.

DOWN LOW: Sophomore Erick Nsangou double pumps as he waits for the defender to come back down from a block attempt.