University discusses tech fee implementation

DAVID BARRIOS
Senior Staff Writer

Students can expect to pay up to an additional 5 percent on their tuition thanks to a new technology fee being considered to begin this Fall. This is in addition to the 15 percent tuition increase also expected to be effective in the Fall.

The money from the fee will be invested in the enhancement of instructional technology for students and faculty, including the possible expansion of the University’s wireless network and the expansion of computer labs on campus.

Cathy Akins, assistant vice president of student affairs, will chair the tech fee committee that has been established. The task of the committee is to report recommendations on whether to establish a fee and if so, to recommend how large the fee should be.

“The Technology Fee Committee will make recommendations to administration by mid-March. These recommendations will then be reviewed and submitted to our Board of Trustees for final approval,” said Rosa Jones, vice president of student affairs and member of the committee.

With the amendment of Section 1009.24 of the Florida Statutes, the University Board of Trustees can choose to establish a technology fee to be paid by all students, starting in Fall 2009. The fee may be up to 5 percent of the tuition charged per credit hour. During the first meeting of the tech fee committee on Feb. 11, possible usage of the funds was discussed including the expansion of the University’s wireless network.

“We installed over 625 wireless access points that cover all general purpose classrooms and departments,” said John Cusimano, head of the wireless project. Each access point cost approximately $3,000. Cusimano said Public Safety is concerned about the potential for increased theft.

Golf cart thefts continue unchecked

CHERYL MALONE
Staff Writer

As of last May, the Department of Public Safety has been on constant theft call. Though the theft reports may be coming in from all over campus and by many different people, the calls are all for the same reason: stolen golf carts. The stolen golf carts are showing up all over campus in odd locations, often damage-free, according to police reports.

The latest case of a stolen golf cart was Feb. 6, when a report was made regarding a golf cart being driven in circles in the courtyard. Just as before, the person(s) responsible for the crime were nowhere to be found.

Public Safety explained that security cameras would be a necessity everywhere golf carts are parked on campus to find the person, or group of people, responsible for the crime. However, the level of security cameras needed would come at a high cost.

Aside from courtyards, the golf carts are being found outside office buildings and housing and apartments. The golf carts are often stolen from the International Studies Department due to the manner of the crime, Baro explained.

The golf cart reports themselves often have no witnesses, only sightings of the actual golf cart, according to various case reports.

The greatest degree of damage to the golf carts was seen on Sept. 3, 2008, when one of the carts’ ignition switch and the plastic casing were damaged. Public Safety believes that due to the insufficient security features on the golf carts, they are easily accessible.

“Most of the golf carts are being stolen via their key holes,” said Madeleine Baro, assistant director of Media Relations. “They are not designed for high security locks. The golf carts are made for the golf course.”

At this point, no extra precautions are being made in preventing the theft due to the manner of the crime, Baro explained.

“I’m a fan of no telling who is authorized to be on the carts,” Baro said. “The only way to prevent the thefts currently is to secure the steering wheel with a cable and padlock. This is the same concept of the club device for cars.”
Lecturer talks veganism, animal rights

EAT WHAT COMES FROM THE EARTH, EVERY VITAMIN AND NUTRIENT THAT EXISTS. That's the message that vegan activist Jonathan Safran Foer brought to FIU on Feb. 4 when he talked to a room full of students about his new book, Eating Animals: A consideration of human eating.

Foer explained that animals are not born with carnivorous instincts. He said all humans are born vegan, but only acquire a taste for meat, cheese, milk and eggs when they are force-fed these things during childhood.

“All I’m asking people to do is something that’s natural and natural. It’s funny how people always think that vegans are radical. Enslaving billions of innocent beings, murdering them, cutting them up into pieces and consuming their corpses, flush consumption, growing on some- body else’s rib cage — that’s radical,” Foer said.

“Eat what comes from the earth, every vitamin and nutrient that exists. They have an original source and it’s not the animals. We eat animals after they eat from the earth. Stop filtering your nutrients through somebody else’s body, it’s irrational and illogical.”

High school steroid testing program cut

Florida’s new program to test for steroids among high school athletes has been canceled after becoming a victim of budget cuts. State officials said that in the tough economy, they can’t justify spending the $100,000.

Tests were randomly administered at 53 schools at a cost of $166 apiece. Of the 600 students tested for drugs and steroids, only one had tested positive for steroid use.

Lincoln voted best president

Abraham Lincoln was voted best U.S. president in a poll held by C-Span that ranked presidents from George Washington to George W. Bush. Bush was ranked at No. 36 on the list of 42 presidents. The list was compiled by 65 historians who ranked the presidents by effectiveness on a scale where 1 meant “not effective” and 10 meant “very effective.” George Washington, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Theodore Roose- evelt and Harry Truman rounded out the top five best presidents. James Buchanan, the 15th president, was ranked the worst president.

doing well,” she said. “Right now we’re trying to pick up Valentine’s Day sales as well as picking up on our marketing.”

They just created a Facebook page as part of their marketing efforts and it helped them during Valentine’s week.

“It was a success on Valentine’s,” said senior Antoinette Guaba-Ortiz, store manager and an international relations major. “We used it to show pictures of our merchandise.”

The week of Valentine’s Day did, however, pose a challenge to the store.

“Considering that Valentine’s Day falls on a Saturday, in the flower business that’s a really difficult position to be in,” De La Rosa said.

One of the difficulties they faced Valentine’s Day, explained Guaba-Ortiz, is that flower shops traditionally do not open on Saturdays because they do not perform that well.

“It was a challenge getting a lot of people in on Saturday,” she said.

Afrodita’s is usually not open on Saturdays, but Valentine’s Day was an exception. Specials for Valentine’s Day included free gifts with early-placed orders such as boxes of chocolates and teddy bears.

“We had a good show,” Guaba-Ortiz said.

Scott Sakowski, a freshman who was hired last week, helped with the growing number of orders.

“I’m appreciative that they gave me something to do to make some money on the side and make people happy,” Sakowski said.

“A lot of students don’t realize we do both flowers and the Greek store. People coming in seem to forget we offer one or the other,” De La Rosa said.

Guaba-Ortiz added that her main concern is that there is a “lack of knowledge” about who they are and what they offer.

On the new Facebook page, customers are able to check merchandise prices, leave comments and place orders.

They are also focusing on passing fliers in the residential areas and setting up e-mail lists.

“We really want to pick up on our marketing so everyone on campus knows exactly what we do,” De La Rosa said. “It seems our name is getting out there, a lot of people have been stopping in.”

“I can order some merchandise, but they definitely need a little more variety,” said Shirley Armenteros, a student passing by.

A regular customer showed support for the store.

“I’ve always been satisfied with the merchandise,” said Ruth Ann Maranto, senior financial assistant for the student financial department.

Making the flower arrangements and seeing customers walk away with a smile is what De La Rosa said she enjoys the most about her job.

“This morning I had a customer come and thank me for the job I had done and that makes me happy,” she said.

Tuition may rise 5 percent if tech fee is put in effect

most popular open areas that students visit. However, due to limited resources, we didn’t cover classrooms and labs that are operated by colleges or units and we couldn’t cover all open areas where students often use their laptop computers,” explained Min Yao, chief information officer and another member of the committee.

The creation of a virtual student lab was also mentioned, which would allow students to use lab software, such as Photoshop and AutoCAD, 24 hours a day and seven days a week anywhere and anytime as long as there is an Internet connection.

“We have done so much in such a short time. We take pride in our progress and achievements. On the other hand, during this rapid growth, the funding for technology infrastructure and services did not grow as rapidly as other areas,” Yao said.

A few years ago, EDUCAUSE, a national consortium for college and university technology organizations, did a survey of university funding on technology.

It found that research universities typically spent about 5 percent or more of their budget on technology services and infrastructure per year, teaching universities spent about 4 percent and community colleges spent about 3 percent. FIU’s funding on technology services and infrastructure is about 3 percent.

Student Government Association members from Biscayne Bay Campus and University Park were also asked to sit on the committee to represent student concerns about a possible increase.

“I feel that students at first will have objections to the tech fee,” said Kendra Paul, vice president of BBC’s Student Government Council. “Especially during these economic times, an increase in anything is the last thing students want to hear. I personally want to evaluate all the options before stating whether I object or not to the increase.”

Nick Antoiiello, lower division senator, holds a similar viewpoint.

“I sympathize with students in these difficult financial times. Just as our University is facing financial challenges, so are our students,” Antoiiello said. “At the same time, our University is extremely underfunded compared to other institutions throughout the nation. Our technological infrastructure is not on par with other major urban research institutions and technological updates are clearly needed.”

In the coming weeks, student government is planning to distribute a survey to the students to gauge reaction to the tuition increases that faces them. One of the questions on the survey asks students if they would support a technology fee and if so, how large of a fee.

Marketing to the student body to get opinions on the fee was also discussed at the committee meeting with the possibility of future forums to get students’ opinion.

“We talk about being a large research university. Well, this is what large research universities invest in,” Yao said.
Oscar Mayer seeks fresh ‘hotdoggers’

JOSH GARCIA  Staff Writer

While a student at the University, public relations alumna Magaly Estrella never thought she would spend a year driving in a 27-foot hot dog-shaped vehicle. After attending an information session last year, she found herself behind the wheel of the Oscar Mayer Wienermobile.

But Estrella’s time with Oscar Mayer is coming to an end and the company is looking for 14 interns to serve as official representatives, or “hotdoggers,” to ride in the Wienermobile throughout America to promote the brand.

“Driving in the Wienermobile is a lot of fun and it’s a lot of responsibility,” Estrella said.

Career Services at Biscayne Bay Campus will be hosting an information session about the internship opportunity with Oscar Mayer on Feb. 19, in WUC 255.

The event starts at 5:30 p.m. and the session is open to all students.

“It’s a great opportunity for students to develop skills in public relations and learn about marketing,” said Natasha Stubbs, assistant director of Career Services at BCC.

“Counts as an internship experience.”

“Oscar Mayer is a major corporation that can offer really great opportunities. Having a company such as this one come to FIU during these difficult economic times can prove to be an asset to FIU communication students,” said senior Nelda Figuereido, a public relations alumna. Estrella said her position with Oscar Mayer will end in June and that she appreciates the opportunity she has had to travel the country in the past year.

It’s buns of fun. I wish I could keep doing it after June,” Estrella said. “The experience I gained from doing this job is amazing. I’ve seen more than half the country and I’ve been to places that I would have never dreamed of going to.”

“It’s recommended that students who attend the information session come dressed in business casual attire and bring a resume to the event.”

For additional information on the internship visit www.oscarmayer.com or call BCC Career Services at (305) 919-5770.

Despite its prevalence in the English language, the term “lost cause” is really an oxymoron. If the fight was truly lost, why would there still be people fighting for it?

This particular column is inspired by the several times in my life that I was told that I shouldn’t bother trying to change something I didn’t like because I would fail; but it is not about any of these issues, it is meant to be a manifesto to you, my reader, to realize that whatever fight you want to take up, whether it be petty or life-changing, never back down in the face of opposition, no matter how daunting the task may be.

I should mention that, in the examples I am going to give you from my life, I “failed.” This column is not about success. You will not find any inspiring stories about overcoming the odds and bringing about change, but you will hopefully find inspiration to refuse to be trampled over and to use your right to free speech, which is afforded to you with few conditions and which many people in the world would die to have.

In high school, my senior class president was removed from office by the school administration over a controversial situation. I was one person who led an effort to reinstate him, including making shirts and a petition. Never in all of the years that I was given a copy of the Student Code of Conduct to take home did I ever think that I would actually need to reference it, but it would turn out to be one of my first real lessons in civil activism.

The Code stated that so long as I gave them a day’s notice and did not interrupt class time, the administration should not reject my request for a petition. Despite this, getting administrators to approve the petition was much harder than it should have been. Even after taking all of the measures to make sure that it complied with district regulations, I was met with an administrator who told me not to bother because there was no chance in them letting the president back.

She clearly missed the point, however, which was showing that we cared. It didn’t matter to me that he did not get his office back, it mattered that by the time we were done, every administrator knew what the hundreds who signed the petition and the large group that bore the shirts thought.

That’s what I was doing as was stuck in line on the fourth floor of the Red Garage when it occurred to me that the University should adopt the same system that airports and beach parking lots use: a parking availability indicator.

It would be beneficial to students if Parking and Transportation developed a system that could monitor the parking spaces and display “Full” on a screen outside the entrance.

When approached with the idea, Executive Director of Parking and Transportation Bill Foster said that they had done some research into this, but discovered that it would not be an option to pursue at the moment.

“First, the signs are used effectively at airports, hospitals, etc., where people are usually not daily users. At universities, people already know when the garages are full – they come here every day,” Foster said.

Foster also identified cost as an issue. The signs are about $100,000 per garage for a basic package.

While Foster’s points are valid, perhaps an investment into the system, at least one garage at a time, would still be helpful to students as they would know the status of at least a few garages.

In the meantime, Parking and Transportation have taken alternative actions to make parking more available to students, including the GreenRide Carpool Program and the valet parking pilot program on Feb. 16 by the Graham Center to make parking more convenient in that area. We are also evaluating a possible shuttle option to help students travel around campus more easily,” Foster said.

The valet parking is very expensive for students at $5 per hour or $20 per day, but perhaps could come in handy on those days when they’re just really late for an exam and the program can also bring in some revenue from visitors to the University.

With the parking sign idea unlikely becoming a reality, at least not in the near future, take comfort in these newly implemented measures that will surely help in addressing the ubiquitous parking issues.
The Birds is a play by American playwright Len Jenkin who adapted it from Aristophanes, an Athenian playwright. The show centers on Ventable Howland-Cook (Alain Mesa), his nervous talent agent, who both work at the Solar System Casino in Las Vegas. Mr. Smoke and Mr. Sand find themselves owing a considerable amount of money in gambling debts to a local gangster, Buddy Barracas (Alex Moreno), his nervous talent agent. After being beat up by his beautiful, murderous henchwomen, Ms. Heckyl (DeAnna Drayton), they decide they should go in search of two birds that can lead them to the System Casino. Instead, they are mostly haphazardly thrown into the System Casino from most of the cast are inspiring. The performances left the audience wondering what was going on every time they walked on stage. Nevertheless, the performances from the cast, it is a wonder how they were able to turn such a confusing mess into something your average FIU student could even partially understand. Though the performances were highly entertaining, the soap opera moments sprinkled throughout the show left the audience wondering what was going on every time they walked on stage. The other honorable mentions are Morgan Howland-Cook (Queen Poppy) and Jennifer Jean-Louis (The Ornithologist) who both stole the show with their energy and pure talent. Each sang beautifully and made each of their songs enjoyable, though the songs themselves could have been omitted. If you decide to go watch the play, be ready to sit back and accept whatever The Birds throws at you. Overall, this is a fun show to watch.

Get pumped for a healthy heart now

If you didn’t get your heart broken on Valentine’s Day, good for you. But watch out! There are tons of things out there that will shatter your heart to pieces if you are not careful.

While there are some heart disease factors that we can’t control, such as age and genes, there are others we can change. From stress to physical inactivity and too much alcohol – yes, you read right, consuming too much boozie – take care of that little red organ that loves to pitter patter is pretty much our job.

Considering we’re just about halfway through the semester, we know certain events are coming up; mid-term exams. And if you’re taking four or more classes, I pity u. Nothing can be more stressful than having your nose stuck in book after book, day after day.

But if you’re not careful, stress can lead to emotional, psychological and even physical problems, including heart disease and chest pains according to WebMD.com. Being able to identify stressors in your life and releasing the tension they cause are the keys to managing stress, according to the web site. Now since everyone is different, I can’t tell you what will work for you. But for me, I find that a good jog, a quiet time alone or even a break from school and work to spend time with my friends always helps. Besides making you feel sluggish and lazy, physical inactivity will do your heart in. Regular, moderate-to-vigorous physical activity helps prevent heart and blood vessel disease, but the more vigorous the activity, the greater your benefits, according to the American Heart Association.

Now if the thought of hitting the gym – which we have available at both the University Park and Biscayne Bay Campuses – doesn’t sound appealing, then a walk around your neighborhood, skating, or an afternoon jog may work out for you. You may also try washing your car instead of taking it to the car wash or hitting a night club to dance the night away. Cleaning your place is also good for the environment and your heart. A walk around your neighborhood or a hike may work out for you.

And while you clean your place don’t forget to consider the amount of booze you have stored in your kitchen. Not only will it raise your blood pressure, contribute to high triglycerides, cancer and other diseases and produce irregular heartbeats, drinking too much alcohol can cause heart failure and lead to stroke, according to the AHA. Now there’s a scary thought. Next time you want to hit the bottle, consider your heart as it depends on you to make the right choices.

Now let’s all get up and start moving. Don’t just sit there in front of the computer all day. Remember your heart will only beat to the rhythm of how much you make it work. Check your Pulse for health, wellness and fitness every Wednesday. E-mail Eddith at eddith.sevilla@fiu.edu

O’Brien looks to the past, to the west as new show looms

DAVID BAUDER
AP Wire

Moving day approaches. Conan O’Brien is about to pack himself up and head west, when he replaces Jay Leno as host of NBC’s “Tonight” show in June. First things first, though, as a nostalgic O’Brien prepares for the last week of his 16-year run at “Late Night” Feb. 20 in his last show before turning it over to Jimmy Fallon.

“For a while, I was in denial — ‘Oh, we’ll just stop doing this show and we’ll move on to the next one,’” he says. “That’s very me, very male. Men don’t like to say goodbye. My wife told me about six months ago: ‘I think you have to admit that you have mixed feelings about leaving this late-night show, it’s very emotionally charged for you. That’s OK.’”

From the very beginning, he says, it was the show he wanted to do. Even recent Conan converts would recognize some of the humor from that first show: He’s depicted walking down a street where a talking horse calls out to him “Better be as good as Letterman.” He sang “Eldeweiss” hand-in-hand with Tony Randall as the camera cut to a crying Nazi in the audience.

“I’m proud of the show’s originality,” he says. “Letterman’s ‘Late Night’ was obviously brilliant and groundbreaking and changed all of the rules and I’m very proud of the fact that our show, in its tone and its look and its approach had very little to do with the show that came before it or, I think, any other show I’ve seen. I’ve just been trying to think of funny stuff. We miss sometimes, we hit sometimes but I think our average is pretty good.”

NBC had committed to giving him the “Tonight” slot five years ago, although it was only recently that current host Jay Leno decided to stay with the network and do a nightly 10 p.m. show.

Most of O’Brien’s writers will head to California with him. Years ago, switching to that earlier time slot might have meant dramatically changing the tone of the show to appeal to an older audience. But the late-night habits of viewers are different now — many watch the next day on digital video recorders — and the need for such changes has lessened.

“The shows are an extension of the host and, like it or not, this is my sense of humor,” O’Brien says. “It would be a mistake to reinvent myself as a completely different person now.”

O’Brien will be facing more formidable competition with Letterman in his new spot. But O’Brien said one night on “Late Night” that he was looking forward to the new schedule.

“You can talk to me in a year and I’ll say ‘Well, there are some problems, there are some complications,’” he said. “But I don’t know what they are. I don’t know if there will be.”

O’Brien is trying to maintain the element of surprise for his last week of shows, saying he wants to rely on old friends of “Late Night” instead of stunt casting.

“The one thing that’s worked consistently for me is just to use your common sense, just try to be funny,” O’Brien says. “For 16 years, I’ve just been trying to think of funny stuff. We miss sometimes, we hit sometimes but I think our average is pretty good.”

Greeks celebrate one-year anniversary of council

After spending several years fighting to install the Multicultural Greek Council at FIU, the five-member organizations celebrated the group’s one-year anniversary Jan. 23. The organizations that are part of MGC are Lambda Theta Phi Latin Fraternity Inc, Lambda Theta Alpha Latin Sorority Inc, Lambda Upsilon Lambda Fraternity Inc, Sigma Lambda Gamma and Delta Phi Omega Sorority Inc.

“We really wanted to install MGC at FIU because we felt MGC could cater more to our needs. We do things a little different than other Greek organizations. For instance we don’t go through rush and MGC is able to focus more on us. I feel like now we have a more united front,” said MGC’s president Stephanie Wesseling a senior and member of Delta Phi Omega.

The organizations of MGC at the University are historically Latin, South Asian and multicultural, although at other campuses they have even more diversity. While these organizations take pride in their diversity they do not discriminate against any other ethnicity and welcome others that share their same core values.

Some of its activities this past year have been MGC week in September, where there were different events and activities throughout the week and a step, stroll and salute exhibition where all the organizations of MGC came out and showed what they could do. There was also a poetry open mic night, which drew in many people.

They also participated in Relay for Life and blood drives last year. MGC is making it a priority to participate in at least two community service events a semester, where at least 50 percent plus one of each chapter must attend.

“Once a month, we do something that is a priority to participate in at least two community service events a semester, where at least 50 percent plus one of each chapter must attend,” said FIU’s MGC, however Wesseling said that if they meet all their requirements they will be more than welcome to join. Right now, MGC is still new and Wesseling feels they need to improve a little, but more before they start installing more chapters.

Wesseling said one of MGC’s main goals this year is “to try to unify the Greek community as a whole and participate in other Greek organizations’ events.”

In the short time MGC has been here they have already made a great deal of progress, so I think we can look forward to seeing what they can do this year.

Newfound offensive success just what the team needed

The offense was the missing piece to the machine.

During the first five games, the offense had the Golden Panthers struggling like an old lawn mower that just refused to turn on. Just one weekend and pressure situations made the softball team’s bats come alive to cut down four out of five of its opponents this past weekend.

The high-powered offense from last season has not returned, but a lower octane version of it is developing. With Sun Belt Conference play just two weeks away, the Golden Panthers could not have found a better time to wipe off the early season rust. Just a bit more runs on the scoreboard added to the team’s formula should grant them a strong chance at winning the conference.

Predicted to be the No. 4 team by the Sun Belt Conference Preseason Coach’s Poll entering this season, the Golden Panthers might take some opponents by surprise. Kasey Barrett was expected to be the team’s main source of pitching power. She got a little bit of help in the form of Jennifer Gniadek and Paige Cassidy. Cassidy and Cassidy are eating up all the innings Barrett’s arm absorbed a season ago.

This season, the trio establishes the tone every game by not allowing much offensive output early on; in 10 games, no team has scored in the first two innings. This usually leads to low, hard-fought games, which just wars teams down headed into the late innings. After leading in the sixth inning, the Golden Panthers are a perfect 3-0. Dominant pitching alleviates some of the burden placed on the offense.

Trade in those home run swings for bunt singles. This offense can be shut down, but is reliable enough to be tapped into if needed. Take, for example, the Golden Panthers’ last game where they trailed 8-3 in the final inning. During the five-run inning, the team manufactured runs by singling, walking and making contact. There were no home runs and just one double in the entire inning. Getting on base is the most pressure the offense will apply to opponents.

Power pitching and timely hitting collided to create 5-4-6-3 team head coach Beth McClendon said she expected to make to the NCAA Tournament. The opening weekend left the Golden Panthers with a losing record. Coach McClendon said the team’s freshmen needed to become accustomed to the team to have better success. It took two weekends for the Golden Panthers to find their identity.

After their next game against Fordham, the 13 remaining games on the schedule are versus Sun Belt Conference teams. The plan so far is developing as conveniently as can be. With the pitching staff solidified, the freshmen have gained experience and the offense has found ways to score enough runs before playing the most important games of the season.

Finishing last season with a .500 record against conference teams is something this team will not be content with, especially with the Golden Panthers on a three-game winning streak and second-year coach McClendon’s recruits gaining more playing time.

McClendon’s team warmed up for two weeks and is now ready to bulldoze its way to a conference title run.

Fredi Gonzalez on Ramirez: ‘The guy’s a specimen’

Hanley Ramirez worked harder this offseason and ate better. Five days a week, his routine included a 2½-hour gym workout, a one-hour swim in his pool at home and a nice dinner.

“I spend $100 a night in the restaurant,” the Florida Marlins’ All-Star shortstop says with a grin. “I used to spend $5 at Wendy’s.”

While Ramirez had never worked out much in the past. His career on-base plus slugging percentage is .771 in 55 games batting third, compared with .931 batting leadoff. He says teams pitched him differently when he batted third, throwing him offspeed pitches in fastball situations.

Gonzalez figures Ramirez now has enough experience to adjust to any role.

“Wherever he hits, he shouldn’t change his game or his approach,” Gonzalez says. Despite the added bulk, Ramirez says his focus is on his batting average, not his home-run total.

“The year’s about power,” he says. “I don’t think about hitting home runs.”

Ramirez wants to play all 162 games. At age 25, he says he also wants to assume more of a leadership role to help the Marlins reach the playoffs. He set a good example in the offseason with his rigorous regimen.

“When you’ve got a couple of years in the big leagues,” Ramirez says, “you learn to be a good teammate.”

Interim coach lifts team with work ethic, energy going into advertising, but she realized that a 9-to-5 job was not meant for her.

“They know it does not bother me to work 18 hours a day for them,” Applebaum said.

After her short career in advertising, Applebaum coached at her high school, Gulliver Prep. In 2007, she led the boys and girls middle school tennis teams, which showed her a new side of tennis.

“It helped me learn the coaching side of it,” she said. I had to learn the basics."

One year after she took the job at Gulliver, she got the assistant coaching position at FIU. Within her first few weeks as assistant coach, she set up a booster club to raise funds for the team.

In October, head coach Carlos Casely resigned for personal reasons, Applebaum became the interim head coach and she had to make the transition from assistant coach to head coach.

“As an assistant coach, you are there to be a shoulder to cry on, a hand to guide them, you are there with an open door to all their personal issues,” Applebaum said. “But as head coach, you want to be a friend and at the same time need to set up boundaries.”

The transition from assistant coach to head coach did affect the players though. They would test the limits to see how far they could push the envelope, but learned respect very quickly.

“They respect the fact that I have played in every single level and they know my judgment will help them,” she said.

Applebaum implemented a new set of rules that took the players by surprise. The girls have study hall, a curfew and a strict training schedule. Some of the girls took a while to adjust.

Junior Priscilla Castillo enjoys Applebaum’s drive to improving.

“She pushes us to work harder and she’s on top of everything,” Castillo said. When Applebaum took over the program, she had a vision of where she wanted to take the team. She wants the University to be noticed and she is working on it.

“I want to take this program to the next level,” she said. “We want to get people excited about the team.”

As interim head coach, Applebaum plans on becoming head coach soon.

“I worked very hard and I want to be the head coach, but I think it is out of my hands,” she said.

Applebaum has set the goals high for this year’s team. FIU ended last season with an overall 19-5 record and No. 30 national ranking, according to Intercollegiate Tennis Association.

“This group of girls has the potential to be top 25 in the country by the end of the season,” said Applebaum. “We can be one of the best programs in the nation.”

are tired at the end of the season, we are going to be feeling great.”

Off the court, Applebaum wants her team to know that her interim status is not an issue.

“They trust me,” she said. “They know that I will not leave them. I’m not a quitter. They need to have trust in the coach and I think that’s something that was not there last year.”

Another component of the team’s early success is the new doubles pair of Pazo and freshman Mariana Muci.

Pazo says the team’s overall youth and perceived inexperience won’t affect the team’s record.

“The team’s talent and dedication will carry us throughout the season,” Pazo said.

Pazo was even more adamant regarding her thoughts on their ability to win this season.

However, maybe the biggest factor in the girls’ chances to make it back to the top of the conference will be from an obstacle beyond their control. When asked what the biggest challenge may be to reaching their goals, the first word both Pazo and Brito said was “injuries.”

Brito battled through a bit of a slow start to the season while being bothered by a few nagging injuries, but now is 100 percent. She is coming on strong right when the team needed consistency the most. Pazo says staying healthy is crucial.

“If we avoid injuries we should be just fine,” Pazo said.

Having young and inexperienced players is a hurdle the team believes it can overcome. Pazo feels this team can bring back conference championships to a program two years removed from winning the Sun Belt.

“We are all good friends, we trust each other and have confidence in our abilities,” she said.

They know it does not bother me to work 18 hours a day for them, said Applebaum. “We can be one of the best programs in the nation.”

Applebaum, 24, ready for challenge of coaching

Three years ago Melissa Applebaum competed in the NCAA tennis championship. This year she will be coaching girls a couple years her junior.

Last year Applebaum, who played for the University of Miami in 2006, was the assistant coach at FIU. Now, at 24, she is the interim head coach for FIU’s tennis team.

Being so young, Applebaum believes her age is an advantage when working with the girls. She is one of the youngest coaches at the University, but Applebaum sees it as a positive.

“Since I was a player so recently, I can put myself in their shoes,” Applebaum said.

Applebaum has played tennis for 20 years and she takes her experience as a player and utilizes it for coaching. She tries to balance her inner player to apply it to coaching.

“I think I try to use a little bit of both,” Applebaum said. “I think that they trust the fact that I have played; they know what I tell them will work.”

Applebaum is full of energy. Her parents put her in gymnastics and tennis to control her energy when she was younger. In 2006, she considered tennis to control her energy when she was younger. In 2006, she considered tennis to control her energy when she was younger.

Youthful roster jumps off to strong start behind Brito

Maria Dolores Pazo knows what it’s like to win a conference championship. As a freshman, she helped the tennis team win a title. Now, as a junior on a team with no seniors, she understands exactly what it will take to be that successful again.

“We find it hard to accept defeat,” Pazo said. “We are built to win a conference championship and make a run in the NCAA tournament.”

Last year, women’s tennis finished with a trip to the conference finals and an appearance in the regional playoffs. However, with a roster for this season filled with first and second-year players and a young interim head coach, struggles were almost to be expected. Someone forgot to tell that to the girls.

The team is off to a solid 3-3 start without having played a home match yet and recently defeated the No. 42 ranked Long Beach State team.

Sophomore Liset Brito, who has won three singles matches in a row, said the team is unaffected by a lack of senior leadership and that all the girls have taken an active role in becoming better leaders on an individual basis.

Brito also said that regardless of interim head coach Melissa Applebaum’s inexperience, it’s a huge benefit having a young coach who played the game and is very familiar with intercollegiate tennis.

"Coach was able to get us organized and motivated and we are improving as a team every day," Brito said.

The first-year coach is not letting her players off lightly during practice.

Team earns comeback victory

Down 8-3 in the bottom of the seventh, the Golden Panthers found a way to fight back.

A series of miscues by Florida Gulf Coast University let FIU claw its way back to tie the game. In the bottom of the ninth, a wild pitch paved the way for Jessica Landau to score the game-winning run.

The Golden Panthers were able to get the offense rolling early on. With the bases loaded and two outs in the first inning, freshman Ashley McClain smacked an RBI single to center field, driving in Kim Rodriguez.

Welch came up next with a two-run single to make the score 3-0. FGCU had just one hit up heading into the fourth inning, however, the momentum switched up when Courtney Platt nailed a three-run homer into center field, tying the score at three all. Kasey Barrett came in the game for Cassady at this point and struck out the next two batters. However, the Eagles were able to score two runs off of Barrett in the following inning to take the lead at 5-3.

Freshman Jennifer Gniadek came in during the seventh inning after Barrett gave up a single and then an RBI double by Platt. Gniadek gave up two runs, one charged to Barrett, to make the score 6-3.

Heading into the bottom of the inning, FIU senior Kate Bell was hit on a pitch by Cassady Rash with one out. Kim Rodriguez then singled to left field, allowing Bell to advance to second. Jessica Landau was then walked and FGCU switched pitchers with the bases loaded. However, Lauren Spiers was also walked.
