Isiah Thomas removed as head basketball coach

IGOR MELLO
Sports Director
igor.mello@fiusm.com

Isiah Thomas has been relieved of his duties as coach of FIU. Athletic Director Pete Garcia announced on April 6 that Thomas was no longer part of their future in men's basketball. An emotional Thomas sat outside the FIU basketball facility handing hugs to his former players. Thomas informed his players and staff that he would no longer be part of the program.

“We want to thank [Isiah] Thomas for his three years here at FIU,” Garcia said. “However, we have decided to take the program in a different direction.”

Thomas had Chicago prospect Milton Doyle, as well as other recruits visiting the campus when he was informed of his firing. “This isn’t what we were expecting today,” Thomas said. “We had a nice group of kids working in our gym today and that’s the end.”

An emotional Thomas will now move on to the next chapter of his life.

Farinas ticket wins presidency by 0.8 percent

MELISSA CACERES
News Director
melissa.caceres@fiusm.com

It was close.

The Student Government Association presidential election was decided by a margin of only 71 votes.

Presidential candidate Laura Farinas and her running mate Alex Castro won the student government presidency at the Modesto Maidique campus in an election that brought out almost the second largest student voter turnout in the State University System.

“We all saw it was going to be a tight race, and honestly I wouldn’t have it any other way because it made the experience all the more gratifying in the end,” Farinas said in an interview with Student Media. “We won by 71 votes, and I rather win by 71 than by 3,000 because it shows all the work that was put into this election. We want the same numbers to transcend to next year.”

The announcement on April 5 brought campaign supporters to the Graham Center pit, most from the Farinas/Castro ticket and Udhnani/Mautner ticket.

In his opening speech, Jose Toscano, assistant director of Campus Life, stated that voter turnout increased about 44 percent since the previous year. “We haven’t had this much energy in my eight years as an advisor,” he said to the crowd.

Farinas was proclaimed the winner of the election by 0.8 percent difference from the Udhnani ticket. “It was a toe-to-toe battle,” said Toscano. “If both tickets came to me now, I would not be able to advise them on what to do better.”

Donovan Dawson, Student Government Council at Modesto Maidique Campus Senate speaker, is hoping for the same energy from the candidates in the transition process into their positions.

“A lot of the results
The Beacon – Monday, April 9, 2012

2012-2013 SGC-MMC SENATE WINNERS

President/VP
Laura Farinas/Alex Castro

Honors College
Raul Alvarez

Environment
Bryand Acosta

Nursing and Health Sciences
Rushele Flowers

At-Large
Giovanni Castro

Education
Katerina Cortina

Graduate
Anas Salah Eddin

Housing
Clement “Mario” Winter

Lawana Garcia

Business
Celia Valle

Seychelle Beth Jones

Tuscany

Graduate
Sidney Drake

Graduate
Svetlana V. Tyutina

National
Ohio school to let gay student wear T-shirt 1 day

A gay student who sued his public high school for prohibiting him from wearing a T-shirt designed to urge tolerance of gays will be allowed to wear the shirt for at least one day.

The southwest Ohio school district agreed in a conference between attorneys and the judge to let 16-year-old Maverick Couch wear the shirt bearing the message “Jesus Is Not A Homophobe” on April 20, according to federal court records. But Couch’s lawsuit charging that Waynesville High School and the Wayne Local School District are violating his freedom of expression rights is proceeding.

World
Spain becomes focus as euro debt fears return

Rising concerns over Spain’s economy and its ability to handle its debts sent its cost of borrowing soaring. Spain has become the focus of investor concerns as its economy is heading for a return to recession and unemployment stands at around 23 percent.

A disappointing set of Spanish bond auctions on Wednesday — where it managed to raise €2.6 billion at a cost of 5.8 percent. and also introducing them to their positions into their positions. Dawson will be aiding the president and vice president-elect.

“The whole process pretty much involves sitting down with them and seeing what is realistic in their initiatives and also introducing them to [University administrators],” said O’Keefe.

NEWS FLASH

LOCAL

Group formed to push Fla. religion amendment

A ballot proposal that would repeal Florida’s ban on public funding of churches and other religious organizations is getting organized support.

Amendment 8 would do the opposite of the current ban by prohibiting the state and local governments from denying funding based on religious identity or belief.

Former state Rep. Jean Zappata on Thursday announced the “Yes on 8 Campaign” would work for passage of the proposed state constitutional amendment. It will need 60 percent voter approval to pass on Nov. 6.

National

The Beacon – Monday, April 9, 2012

2

www.fiusm.com

2

The Beacon – Monday, April 9, 2012

www.fiusm.com

2

WORLD

NATIONAL

LOCAL

the “Yes on 8 Campaign” would work for passage of the proposed state constitutional amendment. It will need 60 percent voter approval to pass on Nov. 6.

“Every single one of my votes were from people who liked my ideas and I’m very proud of that,” said Samir Patel, former presidential candidate.

Tuscany found this election year to be different from the others, not only because of the multiple tickets but because of the campaigning methods.

“They really went out there, outside of GC, to find the students,” Tuscany said. “Many times our student groups neglect to see that the other 40,000 FIU students are out there and not here at the GC.”

According to Tuscany, last year was the birth of the use of cell phones, laptops and iPads for voting.

He added that “the three tickets really understood the use of these mediums and from that birth, there was an evolution.”

The Udhnani-Muñter ticket took advantage of the technology and felt that despite their loss, they still made an impact on the student body.

“We showed students that there is a different SGA out there,” said Conner Muñter, former vice presidential candidate. “If anything came out of this, it was the dramatic increase in awareness.”

Farinas and Castro have begun the transition period and said they were ready to get to work.

“Laura and I are more than prepared to start working,” Castro said. “Campaigning was the beginning, now is when we get to work.”

Additional reporting by Melhor Leonor.

FIU is second in state voter turnout

On Wednesdays and Fridays during the Fall and Spring semesters and once a week during the Summer 1.

The Samir-Wu ticket lagged behind with 575 votes, 6.5 percent of the vote.

Every single one of my votes were from people who liked my ideas and I’m very proud of that,” said Samir Patel, former presidential candidate.

Tuscany found this election year to be different from the others, not only because of the multiple tickets but because of the campaigning methods.

“They really went out there, outside of GC, to find the students,” Tuscany said. “Many times our student groups neglect to see that the other 40,000 FIU students are out there and not here at the GC.”

According to Tuscany, last year was the birth of the use of cell phones, laptops and iPads for voting.

He added that “the three tickets really understood the use of these mediums and from that birth, there was an evolution.”

The Udhnani-Muñter ticket took advantage of the technology and felt that despite their loss, they still made an impact on the student body.

“We showed students that there is a different SGA out there,” said Conner Muñter, former vice presidential candidate. “If anything came out of this, it was the dramatic increase in awareness.”

Farinas and Castro have begun the transition period and said they were ready to get to work.

“Laura and I are more than prepared to start working,” Castro said. “Campaigning was the beginning, now is when we get to work.”

Additional reporting by Melhor Leonor.

FIU is second in state voter turnout

On Wednesdays and Fridays during the Fall and Spring semesters and once a week during the Summer 1.

The Samir-Wu ticket lagged behind with 575 votes, 6.5 percent of the vote.

Every single one of my votes were from people who liked my ideas and I’m very proud of that,” said Samir Patel, former presidential candidate.

Tuscany found this election year to be different from the others, not only because of the multiple tickets but because of the campaigning methods.

“They really went out there, outside of GC, to find the students,” Tuscany said. “Many times our student groups neglect to see that the other 40,000 FIU students are out there and not here at the GC.”

According to Tuscany, last year was the birth of the use of cell phones, laptops and iPads for voting.

He added that “the three tickets really understood the use of these mediums and from that birth, there was an evolution.”

The Udhnani-Muñter ticket took advantage of the technology and felt that despite their loss, they still made an impact on the student body.

“We showed students that there is a different SGA out there,” said Conner Muñter, former vice presidential candidate. “If anything came out of this, it was the dramatic increase in awareness.”

Farinas and Castro have begun the transition period and said they were ready to get to work.

“Laura and I are more than prepared to start working,” Castro said. “Campaigning was the beginning, now is when we get to work.”

Additional reporting by Melhor Leonor.
END OF AN ERA

Time for the program to start fresh

There is one thing that the basketball program needed: A fresh start.

There should not be a surprise that comes from the sudden release of Isiah Thomas. A coach who has had a losing record in all three seasons at the University. A coach who had one eye on his duties at FIU while having a wandering eye on the NBA.

No, the firing is not surprising. Yet whatever direction Pete Garcia, Executive Director of Sports and Entertainment, decides to go with in the hiring of his next head coach could be telling of what to expect for years to come.

Thomas is a likable figure. He is fun to talk to. He can grab anyone’s attention when he walks into a room.

His players have the utmost respect for him as a person and a mentor. With that said, I was a strong advocate that Thomas’ days were numbered. Whether it was at the hands of Garcia or by his own will, Thomas’ days were numbered.

Thomas mentioned he was “fully committed to building the program here.” The problem with that statement is that it is false. In August 2010, Thomas accepted a consultant role for the New York Knicks while still being the coach at the University. The only reason he could not continue was because it violated NBA bylaws. That’s not a full commitment.

That’s a cliche that a person says to ears who want to be deceived. Thomas loved the NBA. He wanted back in any way possible. He saw an opportunity and took it. That does not make him a bad guy. He strives for excellence. But striving for something doesn’t make you good at it.

Even before Thomas arrived at FIU, he led an Indiana Pacers team from being a title contender to a talented-yet-middle-of-the-pack ball club. Although an aging squad may not have been his fault, Larry Bird, the president of basketball operations for the Pacers, let him go.

Then the New York Knicks came calling. When he became coach, Thomas posted an overall winning percentage of .491 as head coach, fifth lowest in Knicks history. Just add the three seasons at FIU and the numbers equal one thing; Thomas is not a good coach.

There is no doubt that Thomas is captivating. In any room that he stands in, the focus immediately goes to him. His smile is infectious. There is passion that burns inside of him. Even standing amongst superstars such as Lebron James and Dwyane Wade during the star-filled “South Florida Classic” basketball charity game held at U.S. Century Bank Arena, Thomas bad everyone’s attention whenever he spoke.

With such a hold that he can have over people, there are not many people who can be better at the recruiting game for FIU. That does not mean he could get the X’s and O’s down.

This is the chance for the athletics department to get it right. The basketball program at the University has suffered enough. Garcia must look for someone who is qualified and competent. It should not matter whether he brings media attention or name-prestige. What should matter is what happens on the court and finding someone who can dictate the game from the bench.

So now it is in Garcia’s hands. Seek out quality over a big name. Hard work over the spotlight. Someone who is devoted to finding ways to win games in the film room over someone who just basks in the glory of their own name.

If Garcia looks for the right coach, the wins will come. Wins will bring in the crowd and the media attention.

In a positive way.

Thomas will take coaching break

There were no coaches were pretty excited about the foundation we had laid here,’’ Thomas said. “Four out of the top 50 players in the state of Florida had already given us verbal commitments, so I’m not sure [what the decision was]. We’re all kind of stunned.”

Thomas, a hall of fame point guard, signed a five-year deal worth $1.4 million in 2009 in which he donated his first year’s salary. He was 26-65 during his three seasons at FIU, including 7-25 in his first season as head coach.

“I was fully committed to building the program here. I came here with every intention of building the program. They gave me five years to do it. The first year they said it didn’t count. I even gave back my salary for the first year. So really I’ve been here two years. I’ve had two recruiting classes and this would’ve been my third year coming up and we were poised to do good things,” Thomas said.

Rumors continually circulated about his future in the NBA while at FIU. Despite accepting a job as a consultant for the New York Knicks in 2010, which violated NBA by-laws, Thomas resigned and stayed at FIU at the time. But now with the free time, Thomas has decided to take a break from any coaching duties.

“I’m going to take some time off and kind of digest what has just happened here,” Thomas said.

THE AFTERMATH

With Thomas out as head coach, so may a few of his former and current players at FIU. Sophomore Dominique Ferguson, who was recruited by Thomas as early as 2009, used his social media account to vent his frustration.

“[I] Came here to play for one of the most genuine people I’ve ever met and now these people let him go. I hope I can get my release now,’’ said Ferguson on his Twitter account. “As much stuff as he’s done for this school for FIU to do him like this, he’s done much more things that have changed our lives as men.”
Heat teammates still believe James is the MVP

TIM REYNOLDS
AP Staff

Whenever LeBron James gets asked about the NBA MVP award, he seems to answer carefully, as if to avoid any suggestion that he’s campaigning for his third trophy.

In fairness, James doesn’t have to do much lobbying.

Everyone else in the Miami Heat locker room takes care of that. And they say the James-for-MVP movement should be going strong.

Not only did the Heat win a marquee game on Wednesday night — they beat the Oklahoma City Thunder 98-93 — but James won a head-to-head matchup against the player who is generally considered to be his top competition in the MVP race. He finished with 34 points, 10 assists and seven rebounds, while Kevin Durant had his 30-point night also marked by a career-worst nine turnovers.

“I think he’s the best two-way player in this league,” Heat coach Erik Spoelstra said.

“He does it in a night in, night-out basis and he does it in a way where most teams would not ask a player to shoulder that type of responsibility.

But the fact remains: He must play at an MVP level at both ends of the court at the same time playing four positions offensively.”

James’ two biggest plays against the Thunder may be ones that don’t show up in the box score.

Oklahoma City had two possessions in the final 4 minutes when it had shots for a one-point lead. James snuffed out both. He ran Westbrook down and blocked a layup with 3:49 left — ironically, it was at the same spot on the court where Westbrook grabbed him around the left shoulder and right side of his waist and sent him sprawling to the floor two quarters earlier — to preserve a 92-91 Heat edge.

Then with 1:30 remaining, the score then 94-93, Durant backed James down on the low post and tried a turnaround. James contested it well, so well that not only did Durant miss, but his shot bounced off the top of the backboard.

Oklahoma City didn’t score again, and James and the Heat were soon enjoying their payback win. On March 25, James was held to 17 and the Heat lost at Oklahoma City 103-87.

“A great player,” Thunder coach Scott Brooks said of James after Wednesday’s game.

“You’re not going to hold down a great player often. He missed some shots the first time we played them and we made him take some tough ones. He was feeling good. His jump shot was falling and he was getting some buckets in transition.”

It’s not a stretch to say that James wants his third MVP in four seasons, and in what probably is no surprise either, Durant acknowledged before the game that he would like to win the award.

Durant thinks it’s too early to have the conversation — and when it is time, he indicated he’d be like James, saying he’d rather not tot his own merits.

Lebron James [right] is averaging 26.9 points per game.

“I can’t worry about that,” Durant said when asked about his own MVP candidacy. “If you worry about that type of stuff, that’s when you take your focus off the game, start doing stuff that you don’t want to do on the floor. I can’t worry about that. It’s not in my control. All I can control is how hard I work, how hard I play, and whatever else falls in line after that, we’ll see.”

The Heat say they saw plenty on Wednesday.

“Two MVP candidates, you have to want that matchup,” Heat forward Udonis Haslem said. “LeBron accepted the challenge and that’s what we expect him to do as our leader and our MVP candidate. You have to step up to the plate and that’s what he did.”
"Breakdown" raises $2,842

LESLEY BLANCO
Contributing Writer
life@fiusm.com

Every year, the gentlemen of Beta Theta Pi host an event called Beta Breakdown, an annual dance competition among all the fraternities, sororities and other student organizations on campus to help raise money for a specific charity event. This year, the proceeds will go to the American Cancer Society.

"Last year we made around $3,000. This year, [we had a] silent auction and a raffle," said Diego Foronda, philanthropy chairman of Beta Theta Pi and the director of Beta Breakdown.

"The attendance to the event is usually around 400 students full of energy and excitement while they cheer their friends on stage. We [hope that we have garnered] as much support from the community as possible, [making] this Beta Breakdown the best to date."

The sponsors for this event were 5-hour Energy, Muscle Milk, Crocs, Students for Environmental Action, Lids and Music Saves Lives. The prizes for the raffle included a $25 Crocs gift card, two Heat game tickets, a $25 Tunes gift card and a $25 Lids gift card.

Hosted in the GC Ballrooms this past Monday, April 2, Beta Breakdown was a hit. Beta Theta Pi was able to triumphantly raise $2,842.66 for the American Cancer Society.

"This event was extremely entertaining: the audience was captivated by the creative and innovative performances by the six dance teams. The dance teams that competed against each other were Sigma Sigma Sigma, Sigma Chi, Delta Phi Epsilon, Delta Sigma Theta, Pi Kappa Phi, Tokyo Love Bots (the only non-Greek dance team), Alpha Omicron and Sigma Alpha Mu.

The six dance teams gave stellar performances. The dance teams were competitive to the core and assembled America’s Best Dance Crew, a competitive dance reality TV series. Unavoidably, the competition came down to the Tokyo Love Bots and the girls of Delta Phi Epsilon. The Tokyo Love Bots gave a viva cious and charismatic Matrix themed performance; they channeled their energies and had no trouble mesmerizing the crowd.

Delta Phi Epsilon donned white masks and glowing neon shirts. Their creative choreography added to the momentum of the performance. An honorable mention was Static Noise; their theme was based on the character of Mario from the classic video games. Static Noise’s performance earned them the vote as Viewers’ Choice and they came in third place. Although the Tokyo Love Bots and last year’s winners, Delta Phi Epsilon, were tied, the judges determined the winner by calculating the highest ranked team by each judge. The results named Delta Phi Epsilon as the champions once again. When asking one of the supporters of the event about his take on Beta Breakdown, senior Kenneth San Juan said, "[The student body] is very cohesive. Every organization or fraternity or sorority has a different vibe, but they all make the best of the situation and support each other."

Beta Breakdown took place on April 2. This year, all of the proceeds go to the American Cancer Society.

Contact Us
Enea Erdogan
Lifel Editor
enea.erdogan@fiusm.com

ARTS BEAT
Italian architecture at The Frost

MARCY DIAZ
Staff Writer
marcy.diaz@fiusm.com

Italy is recognized as the birthplace of world renowned art, such as the Mona Lisa and the statue of David. However, many of Italy’s most famous works can’t be found on the walls of any museum.

The majesty of Italian architecture was the highlight of The Patricia & Phillip Frost Art Museum’s Meet & Mingle event last Wednesday night. Tied to the Meet & Mingle event is the Metropolitan/Colony: Africa and Italy exhibition on the second floor of the Frost museum, where guest speaker Guido Montanari discussed the history and urbanization of Italian architecture during the Fascist Era.

Built during the rise of Mussolini’s fascist Italy, these structures were a symbol of unity and Italian pride. Simplistic, symmetrical and with hints of inspiration from ancient Rome, buildings like Roma Palazzo della Civiltà Italiana were built. During the event, Montanari said that the latest Italian architecture is heavily influenced by major architects of this time. Nonetheless, Italy continues to build while carrying the traditions of its past as it continues to be a nation of poets, artists, heroes, saints, thinkers, scientists, sailors and transmigrants.

Metropolis/Colony: Africa and Italy
In the Wolfsonian Teaching Gallery at the Frost Art Museum

January 17, 2012 – April 15, 2012

Feel a little protective of my Thrifting haunts. It gives me a little bit of anxiety to know that someone else may be uncovering a vintage Escada jacket that could be hanging in my closet.

But since this is one of my last haunts, I figured it’s about time to share my wisdom.

Good thrifting in Miami does exist.

When I mean thrifting, I mean Thrift. Not a fancy store vintage store that is well curated with amazing pieces. Thrifting is small scale. Thrifting is not some huge selection of garments that are already organized.

The store is clean and new invent ology is put in frequently. My suggestion is to go during the weekdays. It’s more likely that the store will be well stocked towards the end of the week because it can get crowded over the weekend.

This particular Goodwill has a lot of interesting jewelry and accessories to pic through as well as an entire section of old and new shoes. One tip for the girls: look through the men's section, the shoes and accessories because the store is well organized.

I’ve purchased a few hard-to-find pieces from Goodwill. One time I found a famous American designer bag that was a steal for $5. I’ve also bought a few nice vintage Escada pieces, a tweed moschino jacket for $65, and of course a few pairs of shoes.

Red White and Blue Thrift

901 E. 10th Ave
Flamingo Plaza Ste 12
Hialeah, FL 33010

This place is a goldmine for vintage lovers. If you’re looking for really old stuff, this is the place to go. Come here with the entire afternoon off because the place is huge and there is a lot to sort through.

The pricing is a little arbitrary here, so come with a lot of cash on you because the it is cash only. They also have dressing rooms so you can compare accordingly. This place has an awesome selection of accessories, so definitely look through the handbags, shoes and belts.

Salvation Army
1801 W Broward Blvd
 Ft Lauderdale

This is my number one spot. They don’t have the biggest selection, but there are some really interesting pieces. I found an Hermes belt here for $3. I felt like I had robbed someone.

Costume jewelry and handbags are also plentiful, so definitely check that out. My absolute favorite part of this store is their book selection. There are old coffee table books galore for more dollars. Sometimes thriftling is always about finding the unusual.

With enough practice and frequency, I can promise you that you will find some unbelievable things.
Every Wednesday afternoon, there is something I look forward to more than a fresh and flavorful loaf of bread from the FIU Organic Farmers Market Consortium. But as I reach my weekly ritual with bad news, the zucchini bread had sold out.

This led me to wonder, who is the great creator behind these magnificent masterpieces and what is it that makes these products so “green?” To find some answers, I conducted an interview via email with their baker Andrea Frederique.

Born in Germany, Frederique spent time cooking and baking in the kitchen with her mother and grandmother from a very young age. When she arrived in Miami 11 years ago, she claims that she “was not very satisfied for myself with the bakery products here... The purest food, without any preservatives or additives like raisins or nuts etc. I only use fresh ingredients and what is all natural ingredients.

I like to feed myself and others with the best. I try as long as it takes to get the right taste and texture. Also, my kids are good judges. I like to buy fruits when they are in season to get the most flavor, for example mango for my mango bread.

How do you determine when you have the perfect tasting bread? When I try out new recipes, my friends are my guinea pigs. When I have a flavor in mind, I try as long as it takes to get the right taste and texture. Also, my kids are good judges.

What exactly is a “Cottage Food Operation?”

“A Cottage Food Operation” is basically a production from a home based kitchen. Since July 1, 2011 the Law in Florida changed and the state allows the production of non-potentially hazardous foods (i.e. cakes, cookies, bread, etc.) prepared in a personal residence using home kitchen appliances. But I do have to observe the same regulations of proper food handling that any bakery would.

What sets your bread apart from other “green” and “natural” type market bread?

Even though my breads are considered “sweet breads,” they do not contain a lot of sugar. Instead I substitute with fruits or coconut milk or other natural organic ingredients. I like to feed myself and others with the best. I try as long as it takes to get the right taste and texture. Also, my kids are good judges.

What are the health benefits associated with consuming your products?

They have less sugar and more fruits or vegetables. I also offer vegan and gluten free products.

What do you think is the best-selling bread you have? I try as long as it takes to get the right taste and texture. Also, my kids are good judges.

One of the great events and it’s for a good cause. If you have a late class, [the event] gives you something to do at night and it’s a great way to spend time with friends,” said Alexandra Hernandez, junior and criminal justice major.

Explore ▶️ Focus ▶️ Graduate

Find the right major   Stay on track   Finish on time

GRADUATION SUCCESS INITIATIVE

gsi.fiu.edu

Betty Bruno, a staff member of the American Cancer Society and one of the five judges of the event gave a speech about their cause. “In regard to the $100,000 goal, the goal is to save lives. Helping people in need is our main concern,” said Bruno.
Barbaric phenomenon prevalent in United States

In Morocco, conservative social norms pressuring victims of rape to marry their abusers resulted in the death of 16-year-old Amina Filali, who committed suicide by swallowing rat poison. The reasoning behind the law pressuring victims to marry their rapists is two-fold.

- The stigmatization of rape in Moroccan culture ultimately contributes to a culture of shame for the female.
- Their own families, such as the case with Filali, pressure victims to marry their rapists.

Secondly, the Moroccan justice system, a system under a great deal of scrutiny because of this recent death, also pressures victims to marry so that their accusers do not have to be held accountable.

Despite the fact that Filali was raped at knife point, there was a peculiar confusion as to who should be blamed. A week after Filali’s suicide, her mother in an interview with the Associated Press said, “I had to marry her to him, because I couldn’t allow my daughter to have no future and stay unmarried.”

These statements illustrate the culture of shame surrounding being raped.

Filali’s mother heartbreakingly admits that the alternative of her daughter not marrying her attacker was a bleak future.

In an interview with The New York Times, Fatima El Machrafi, a prominent employee of a non-profit organization aimed at providing resources to women who have been abused, said, “The aim of the law is to restore the lost honor of the victim and her family. What it does is legitimize the crime. The rape can marry to dodge punishment. If the family doesn’t want it, the judge can impose it. The victim isn’t taken into account.”

It is because of stigmatization and a legal system that puts the victim’s well being second that the so-called ‘victim’s law’ has been at the forefront of their consideration of the crime that this type of atrocity has occurred.

But while it seems easy for the West to imagine this phenomenon as barbaric and antiquated, the current reproductive health legislation, initiatives that seek to rescind abortion rights, is also quite barbaric and has serious potential to emotionally and physically harm women.

The conviction and relentlessness with which campaigners filled every breeze and walkway on election day, like Greek mosquitoes in a swamp of bad intentions, suggested – and with greater transparency than the Student Government Association is accustomed to – that victory in the elections is more about maneuver than politics.

The consequence of powerlessness, the poverty of whatever influence we might have in comparison to the Greeks, does little for the average student’s incentive to get involved, to take part in a fight that’s already won.

This is to be expected, of course, to stop being a battlefield for political motives and inflictions of conservative ideals - the results are just too catastrophic.

Campaigners create nuisance on campus

I see good cause for apathy, for not caring what happens so long as the furor ends, and all I want are politicians who smile, act courteous, do what they’ll do and play by the rules and please, just leave me alone.

The conviction and relentless following with which campaigners filled every breeze and walkway on election day, like Greek mosquitoes in a swamp of bad intentions, suggested – and with greater transparency than the Student Government Association is accustomed to – that victory in the elections is more about maneuver than politics.

But while it seems easy for the West to imagine this phenomenon as barbaric and antiquated, the current reproductive health legislation, initiatives that seek to rescind abortion rights, is also quite barbaric and has serious potential to emotionally and physically harm women.
Ceremony to honor international students’ efforts

STEPHAN USECHE
Contributing Writer
bbc@fiusm.com

Taking advantage of great deals while helping others is an uncommon deed.

The Multicultural Programs and Services managed to do so by organizing the ninth annual silent auction, the Scholarship Awarding Global Excellence.

The fund raising reception will be taking place April 13 from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m at the Wolfe University Center ballroom at the Biscayne Bay Campus.

SAGE awards international and full-time transfer students who have shown to be hard workers, involved on campus and have a high grade point average.

The scholarship awards $1,000, $750 and $500. SAGE also provides students with assistance in paying for their tuition, textbooks and other academic expenses.

“Next year we want to reward more students,” said Lisa Zuniga, graduate assistant of MPAS. “We want to improve each year and make it bigger and bigger.”

This year MPAS will be obtaining their auctioned items from booming donors. Some of these items include Marlins tickets, a Miami Heat basketball autographed by the players, a Hilton Fort Lauderdale Beach Resort two night stay, Island Queen Cruises tickets, Fairchild Botanical Garden annual membership, PF Chang’s gift cards and Edible Arrangements gift certificates.

“This year we reached out to different donors we didn’t reach in the past,” Zuniga said.

A laid back ambiance will be transmitted by a live band, different snacks to nibble on and the silent auction.

“It’s going to be more like a reception feel, very laid back,” Zuniga said. “It’s not going to be like a sit down and eat. It will be more like a chat, walk around and bid on things.”

MPAS is expecting the support of the faculty and students. This event will be free for FIU students and $5 for the community.

“As part of the Biscayne Bay Campus Student Programming Council’s FIU LIVE week, SPC and the Indian Student Association teamed up to host the Festival of Colors on April 5. The festivities featured a barrage of colors, foam pit, with water balloons and colored dyes flying through the air.

As part of the Indian Bay Campus Student Programming Council’s FIU LIVE week, SPC and the Indian Student Association teamed up to host the Festival of Colors on April 5. The festivities featured a barrage of colors, foam pit, with water balloons and colored dyes flying through the air.

“Next year we want to reward more students,” said Lisa Zuniga, graduate assistant of MPAS. “We want to improve each year and make it bigger and bigger.”

This year MPAS will be obtaining their auctioned items from booming donors. Some of these items include Marlins tickets, a Miami Heat basketball autographed by the players, a Hilton Fort Lauderdale Beach Resort two night stay, Island Queen Cruises tickets, Fairchild Botanical Garden annual membership, PF Chang’s gift cards and Edible Arrangements gift certificates.

“This year we reached out to different donors we didn’t reach in the past,” Zuniga said.

A laid back ambiance will be transmitted by a live band, different snacks to nibble on and the silent auction.

“It’s going to be more like a reception feel, very laid back,” Zuniga said. “It’s not going to be like a sit down and eat. It will be more like a chat, walk around and bid on things.”

MPAS is expecting the support of the faculty and students. This event will be free for FIU students and $5 for the community.

“As part of the Biscayne Bay Campus Student Programming Council’s FIU LIVE week, SPC and the Indian Student Association teamed up to host the Festival of Colors on April 5. The festivities featured a barrage of colors, foam pit, with water balloons and colored dyes flying through the air.

As part of the Biscayne Bay Campus Student Programming Council’s FIU LIVE week, SPC and the Indian Student Association teamed up to host the Festival of Colors on April 5. The festivities featured a barrage of colors, foam pit, with water balloons and colored dyes flying through the air.

“Next year we want to reward more students,” said Lisa Zuniga, graduate assistant of MPAS. “We want to improve each year and make it bigger and bigger.”

This year MPAS will be obtaining their auctioned items from booming donors. Some of these items include Marlins tickets, a Miami Heat basketball autographed by the players, a Hilton Fort Lauderdale Beach Resort two night stay, Island Queen Cruises tickets, Fairchild Botanical Garden annual membership, PF Chang’s gift cards and Edible Arrangements gift certificates.

“This year we reached out to different donors we didn’t reach in the past,” Zuniga said.

A laid back ambiance will be transmitted by a live band, different snacks to nibble on and the silent auction.

“It’s going to be more like a reception feel, very laid back,” Zuniga said. “It’s not going to be like a sit down and eat. It will be more like a chat, walk around and bid on things.”

MPAS is expecting the support of the faculty and students. This event will be free for FIU students and $5 for the community.

“As part of the Biscayne Bay Campus Student Programming Council’s FIU LIVE week, SPC and the Indian Student Association teamed up to host the Festival of Colors on April 5. The festivities featured a barrage of colors, foam pit, with water balloons and colored dyes flying through the air.

As part of the Biscayne Bay Campus Student Programming Council’s FIU LIVE week, SPC and the Indian Student Association teamed up to host the Festival of Colors on April 5. The festivities featured a barrage of colors, foam pit, with water balloons and colored dyes flying through the air.

“Next year we want to reward more students,” said Lisa Zuniga, graduate assistant of MPAS. “We want to improve each year and make it bigger and bigger.”

This year MPAS will be obtaining their auctioned items from booming donors. Some of these items include Marlins tickets, a Miami Heat basketball autographed by the players, a Hilton Fort Lauderdale Beach Resort two night stay, Island Queen Cruises tickets, Fairchild Botanical Garden annual membership, PF Chang’s gift cards and Edible Arrangements gift certificates.

“This year we reached out to different donors we didn’t reach in the past,” Zuniga said.

A laid back ambiance will be transmitted by a live band, different snacks to nibble on and the silent auction.

“It’s going to be more like a reception feel, very laid back,” Zuniga said. “It’s not going to be like a sit down and eat. It will be more like a chat, walk around and bid on things.”

MPAS is expecting the support of the faculty and students. This event will be free for FIU students and $5 for the community.

“As part of the Biscayne Bay Campus Student Programming Council’s FIU LIVE week, SPC and the Indian Student Association teamed up to host the Festival of Colors on April 5. The festivities featured a barrage of colors, foam pit, with water balloons and colored dyes flying through the air.

As part of the Biscayne Bay Campus Student Programming Council’s FIU LIVE week, SPC and the Indian Student Association teamed up to host the Festival of Colors on April 5. The festivities featured a barrage of colors, foam pit, with water balloons and colored dyes flying through the air.

“Next year we want to reward more students,” said Lisa Zuniga, graduate assistant of MPAS. “We want to improve each year and make it bigger and bigger.”

This year MPAS will be obtaining their auctioned items from booming donors. Some of these items include Marlins tickets, a Miami Heat basketball autographed by the players, a Hilton Fort Lauderdale Beach Resort two night stay, Island Queen Cruises tickets, Fairchild Botanical Garden annual membership, PF Chang’s gift cards and Edible Arrangements gift certificates.

“This year we reached out to different donors we didn’t reach in the past,” Zuniga said.

A laid back ambiance will be transmitted by a live band, different snacks to nibble on and the silent auction.

“It’s going to be more like a reception feel, very laid back,” Zuniga said. “It’s not going to be like a sit down and eat. It will be more like a chat, walk around and bid on things.”

MPAS is expecting the support of the faculty and students. This event will be free for FIU students and $5 for the community.

“As part of the Biscayne Bay Campus Student Programming Council’s FIU LIVE week, SPC and the Indian Student Association teamed up to host the Festival of Colors on April 5. The festivities featured a barrage of colors, foam pit, with water balloons and colored dyes flying through the air.

As part of the Biscayne Bay Campus Student Programming Council’s FIU LIVE week, SPC and the Indian Student Association teamed up to host the Festival of Colors on April 5. The festivities featured a barrage of colors, foam pit, with water balloons and colored dyes flying through the air.