Time to take the tarp off the diamond as baseball season is back in full swing.

As we are approaching the season opener on Friday, Feb. 13 against Tennessee, there are many new faces on this squad that fans will need to get accustomed to. There are exactly 19 new players on the roster that need to fill up some important shoes, especially in the pitching department.

The team lost without a doubt their best pitcher and staff ace Mike Franco. He was drafted in the seventh round by the Tampa Bay Rays in the MLB draft.

Another crucial piece to the pitching staff that was lost to the MLB draft was closer Mike Gomez who was drafted by the Chicago White Sox.

What doesn’t help the team either is that their last season performance seems to be in the middle class.

With Franco no longer on the team, somebody on this pitching staff needs to step up and take the lead. Repeating Franco’s last season performance seems unlikely since he posted a 1.09 ERA which was second best in the nation to compliment his impressive 9-3 record.

The pitcher that came after Franco’s spot in the rotation was Cody Crouse, who Head Coach Turtle Thomas already announced will still be the second starter in the rotation and will need to get accustomed to.

Senior right hand pitcher Robby Kalaf appears to be surfacing as the new closer. Last year Kalaf was a starter for the team.

Twitter, YouTube accounts of Pentagon command in Florida are hacked

Twitter and YouTube accounts belonging to Central Command, headquartered at MacDill Air Force Base in Tampa, Fla., were “compromised” Monday at around 12:30 p.m. EST, the Pentagon confirmed.

The account featured a black background stating “I love you Isis,” along with a jihadi militant wearing a checked scarf and a black flag used by militants in Syria and Iraq.

The hacking is in the ashes of the satiric newspaper Le Canard enchaîné.

The two videos included were of former Chancellor Angela Merkel, British Prime Minister David Cameron and the burgeoning Muslim population.

17 people.

As many as two million people - including 50 world leaders - marched through the streets of Paris in an enormous outpouring of grief and defiance sparked by three days of violence last week that claimed the lives of 17 people.

But as Europeans once again gathered to mourn those killed by terrorism, there were growing concerns that not only would there be more attacks, but also that Europe’s mood may be hard to galvanize toward a backlash against its burgeoning Muslim population.

French President Francois Hollande, German Chancellor Angela Merkel, British Prime Minister David Cameron, Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas led a parade of thousands who marched in the rain in Paris.

The French capital, home to the United Nations and headquarters of the European Union, was closed to the public from early Monday morning until late Tuesday.

The tweets posted on the account included an incorrect tweet.

“Forgiveness doesn’t have a role in the legal system,” she said. The goal of sentencing, she said, is “punishment… all other things are secondary.”

Lawyers for former Florida A&M University percussionist Dante Martin had asked Roche to spare him a prison sentence in Champion’s death.

Martin, 27, faced up to 22 years in prison for his role in the killing.

In October, an Orange County jury found Martin guilty of manslaughter and other charges in the hirings of Champion and two other band members.

In testimony Friday morning a number of character witnesses, including Martin’s sister and mother, vouched for him, saying Martin was a dependable, loving person and noting his lack of a criminal history.

Martin himself took the stand, saying he prays for the Champion family and vowing to speak out against hazing.

“Sometimes we just go with what is tradition,” Martin said of the incident that killed Champion.

current efforts should be improved before a new, $76-billion federal program was created.

Two years later, there’s little expectation that Obama will see his vision of “high quality, universal” pre-kindergarten in his term.

Obama’s push to raise the minimum wage to $10 per hour was more swiftly embraced by Democrats, though saw no more success in Congress.

The next proposal, which was based on a rule that a minimum wage on millions was, another State of the Union-friendly notion that has not been turned into law.

The White House, however, is not convinced by the arguments.

In the face of Republican opposition to any proposal that involves cutting federal government programs or mandates, White House officials acknowledge that certain plans fit into their long-term outlook.

The minimum wage for all school-age children has been a point of contention on the state and local level, building pressure toward eventual congressional action, officials argue. The White House maintains that by elevating the issues, Obama helped build momentum to ensure that a future president picks up where he left off.

The president’s goal is for these to become national programs,” spokesman Eric Schultz said of the preschool and childcare program.

The president’s team is careful to write off the possibility of legislative victory.

“Obama and other American lawmakers say publicly that they want to see a better trained and educated American workforce, Schultz said.

Millennials use technology to enhance camping and time spent in nature

AMIN BENNAIM
Staff Writer
amin.bennaim@fiusm.com

While some might automatically relate millennials with hipsters, Facebook and oversized eyeglasses, the truth is that our generation is about so much more. Millennials like to enjoy the simpler things in life as much as any generation before them; with the added benefit that we can become instant experts through the internet. While Google won’t necessarily turn a city boy into Bear Grylls, it will explain how to set up a tent, build a fire and how much water one should take on a hike. When it truly comes down to it, we are the first generation of Americans who can truly do whatever we want because we have access to so much information about everything there is to do in life.

When you go camping as a millennial there are a few things that you cannot forget to bring along on a camping trip. There are the obvious things such as tents, water, food, bug spray etc., but millennials have to bring other things such as a cell phone, chargers and speakers. While it might seem like spending a weekend in the woods with a cell phone defeats the purpose of camping, in reality technology is such a part of our life that millennials have come to see it as a tool that we can use to make camping more enjoyable.

The old school way of camping in which one is completely disconnected is a dying beast, and with good reason. It makes no sense to struggle with building a fire when good instructions can be found in 5 minutes using a smartphone. This lets one spend more time relaxing, and less time fanning a dying fire. It also seems cruel to disconnect completely when a simple text message can calm worried parents and loved ones. As a matter of fact, trail maps available online have saved my life the few times that I have gotten lost while hiking.

It seems counter-intuitive to say that it is fine to use technology while camping, but technology is only a part of our lives for the sole purpose of making them easier. Camping isn’t about struggling against nature, it is about enjoying it and relaxing in it. Surely, using a phone is no more cheating than using an RV which has electricity, sewage and television. Not that there is a comparison as to who is the most hard-core camper generation, but this does follow the theme of using technology to be more comfortable outside.

The stereotypical millennial would spend a weekend of camping staring at their phone, but the real millennial understands that this is not what camping is all about. The person who will spend their entire time looking at their phone is also the same person that would find an excuse not to go camping. We millennials might sometimes get caught up in whatever is trending on Twitter and miss the world passing us by, but we also know how to do the opposite. While camping, technology doesn’t compete with nature, but work with it to make it more enjoyable. Besides, if there was ever a competition between nature and technology, nature would win every time, because I have never seen the stereotypical millennial walking through a beautiful trail with earphones on staring at a screen.

Court cases illustrate flaws in society

If Michael Brown and Eric Garner’s deaths and the failure to indict the officers who killed them serve to be a legacy for one thing, it must be that they were the catalyst to an awakening of the reprehensible racism in the United States. We do not live in a post-racial society, and the mistaken notion that we do lends to the frustrating tendency to have to prove otherwise, especially in the wake of tragic injustices such as these.

There is no denying that these tragedies are multi-faceted and contain many shades of transgressions, such as police brutality, the need for law enforcement reform and lack of minority representation in many areas across the board, all of which point to a legislative and judicial infrastructure that contributes to systemic oppression. These are all important issues which we, as a society, must address and include in our dialogue when discussing Mike Brown and Eric Garner’s deaths.

For those who claim that the United States is a society where racism is the exception and not the rule, consider the following statistics: The Bureau of Labor Statistics cites that as of December 2014 10.9 percent of blacks were unemployed, the highest out of any ethnic group. Poverty rates for African Americans are the second highest out of any ethnic group (25.8 percent) after American Indians, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. A study by Johns Hopkins sociologist Karl Alexander further reveals the economic immobility that accompanies poverty. Alexander’s study found definitive differences when it came to race and economic mobility such as 89 percent of white high school dropouts having a job by age 22, compared to 40 percent of their black counterparts. Black male prisoners account for 37 percent of the male prison population in the United States, a disproportionate number considering blacks make up only 13 percent of the population. In her book, “The New Jim Crow,” Michelle Alexander points out that the high rates of black men in the prison population coupled with the laws enacted against convicted felons (losing the right to vote, to public housing, to welfare, and access to education) are merely another form of institutional racism.

Michael Brown and Eric Garner are more than just anecdotal examples that mean little about racism in the United States. There is a reason why a black man in Walmart toting a BB gun around the store is viewed as a threat and shot and killed by police, while a group of white men heavily armed with rifles at a Chipotle are considered harmless and somewhat outrageous, however, not dangerous.

This is not to say that race relations have not improved throughout the past few decades since the Civil Rights movement. They have. Nevertheless, improvement does not mean total resolution. Racism today means more than individual prejudice. A more accurate definition of racism in the United States today encompasses and identifies the residual effects of the historical oppression of minority groups which are so ingrained into our institutions that they manifest themselves on an individual level, such as the Michael Brown murder and lack of indictment of the officer who shot him.

Any attempts to view racism in the United States through an inaccurate lens means stagnation and failure for further progress in order to achieve complete success with regards to improving race relations altogether. Recognizing there is a problem is the first step towards correcting it. Michael Brown and Eric Garner, as well as their families, deserve it.
Art Basel inspires students to pursue passions, teaches business side of art

Art Basel is one of the biggest events in Miami, along with Ultra music festival and the Miami International Film Festival. It brings forth creativity and talent from all over the United States, as well as an exciting and enticing ambiance. A lot of the galleries celebrate and exhibit pieces and installations of modern art, film, photography, and traditional and experimental paintings. It is a meeting place for artists from all around the world, like Gertrude Stein’s salon in Paris and Andy Warhol’s factory in New York City.

Art Basel took place in Miami Beach between Dec. 3-6. Pieces were shown in important locations like South Beach Park, Miami’s design district and Wynwood area. Roughly 70,000 visitors took a look at over 250 galleries. The event also inspired FIU art students Natalie Pacheco and Juan Neira. These students took advantage of this opportunity to learn more about the art world and get real world experience by working in art galleries during Art Basel.

Pacheco, a senior majoring in art worked at a gallery titled “Air Ball” which featured a minimalist approach. “Our uniform was black and white to match the theme,” said Pacheco.

There is also an athletic theme demonstrated by the lined snap-backs in one corner and the 3D printed basketballs that sit on a shelf. The event was hosted by Alchemist, a luxury store on Lincoln road, and Snarkitecture, an art and architecture collaborative founded by Alex Mustonen and Daniel Arsham.

“Overall it was an amazing experience,” said Pacheco. “It inspired me to make my own type of designs, like printed shirts, a combination of fashion and art; and to learn how to make high resolution images with Adobe Illustrator.”

The exposure to different artists and different forms of creative expression made her professional future seem more attainable. “After college I’d like to have my own gallery, or work in one, or be a graphic or fashion designer.”

Neira, an art major and a mixed media artist, had a similar experience but was a bit more disillusioned by the commercial aspect of the art world.

“I worked at the SCOPE Art Fair. Beautiful location on Miami Beach. The art was mostly aimed at the commercial market but I was able to find some interesting pieces. The working team was really nice and mostly young adults who were seeking a career in the art world,” said Neira.

He was also around the work of Gertrude Richter, someone whom Neira admires, especially Richter’s “exploration of various painting techniques from photo realism to abstraction.”

These types of work experiences allow students to be exposed to the practical side of their field and not just the theoretical.

In his position Neira was exposed to the commercial art world, which he described as “something you often see as trending. Art pieces that galleries know that the art market is looking for.”

A lot of artists do not like the business side of the art world, which is governed by fads and crazes, as well profits and return on investments— ideas that are not the most conducive to genuine and honest artwork.

Despite the negative aspects of the event, the experience was still an educational and interesting experience. “Seeing the commercial part of the art world gave me some bad vibes as an artist but it was a great experience.” Neira is currently finishing this senior thesis and planning his second exhibit.

Art Basel gave two FIU art students opportunities to work with artists in their field, meet upcoming artists, learn the technical and business sides of the art world, and exposed them to various and different works of art.

These students showed initiative by searching for opportunities in their community and getting involved, characteristics and endeavors, which FIU promotes and that are greatly admirable.

Taken 3 ‘works’ but is ‘headache inducing’

Liam Neeson is, if nothing else, a good actor who can deliver good performances. He’s acted in both action films and dramas, and has recently become somewhat of a big action star thanks to a variety of films, most notably “Taken”. The first “Taken” is an enjoyable enough film with a simple enough premise; it has good action sequences, but isn’t anything too special. The sequel, “Taken 2”, at least for me, was about as okay as the first, with a story that actually connected to the first: good action, good pacing, but again, nothing special.

Then comes “Taken 3” (or should I say, “Tak3n”), another sequel no one asked for, and, according to the film’s tagline, should be the final film in the “Taken” series. To be completely honest, I wouldn’t care if there actually was a fourth “Taken”, but that’s a topic for another article. “Taken 3” has Neeson returning to the role of Bryan Mills, just doing his best to live comfortably in Los Angeles, making sure his daughter Kim (Maggie Grace) is doing well, and so forth. Then bad things start to happen, and before you know it, Bryan and his family are running away from the LAPD and an occasional group of mobster bad guys.

Now, to be fair, “Taken 3” has a better plot than the first two: a variety of things important to the plot happen, multiple characters are actually utilized, and there’s even some twists. Bryan’s baddies actually help out this time, and Forrest Whitaker does a good job as a police inspector. So, as far as characters and an actual story go, I think “Taken 3” does a better job than the first, and especially the second.

Then I start to wish that “Taken” had stayed a standalone movie, because then I wouldn’t have to talk about how the third film in the series has the worst action sequences. It’s too tragic: a better story, more enjoyable events, but the action, the most important part of an action movie, ends up being the worst part of the whole thing. How does that happen? Also, how does an action movie not have that much action, at least compared to the first two? What makes this really problematic for me is that, other than the action sequences, the rest of the film isn’t all that bad. The more “thriller” moments of Bryan sneaking around or doing something else while being chased by the cops are good, and even some of the more drama-focused scenes are done well. But why, Oliver Megaton, why do you insist on shaky cam, jittery camerawork, and so many close-ups? Why make me disoriented during an LA car chase? Why bore me during a gun fight? Why do so few people actually get shot in this movie, let alone attacked? And why are there so many cuts, even during a quiet drama scene? Do you think your audience is so stupid and with such short attention spans?

In the less chaotic moments, “Taken 3” works, but aside from that, it just comes off as headache inducing. This would have been my favorite of the three, if it weren’t for the horrible action scenes. The gun fights (what few there are) come off as embarrassing, making it seem like everyone is shooting blanks and pretending to fall over at some point. I will give “Taken 3” props for its story and acting, which kept me interested and somewhat invested in what was going on. But as far as action is concerned, I couldn’t be more disappointed. Watch at your own risk.
King Tuff’s Miami ‘full on, buck wild’ debut, another testament to rock and roll’s South Florida presence

JEFFREY PIERRE

Perhaps it was the long hours spent touring down the California coast with Gabriel Alcala, Danny Gonzales and Diego Monasteri of the Jacuzzi Boys the summer of 2013 that made Kyle Thomas—the frontman for King Tuff—a believer in the three-piece Miami based band, and, moreover, the city that fostered their inception.

That summer, King Tuff and the Jacuzzi Boys were opening shows for the San Diego based punk-surf-rock band Wavves, who was touring under the success of their fourth studio album, Afraid of Heights, which peaked at number 81 the Billboard 200—the band’s highest charting album to date.

Thomas says his bandmates and the Jacuzzi Boys got very close during those weeks together.

“There was a lot of deep bonding during that tour,” Thomas said. That August, band members were swapped around and a Hall and Oates tape, for Thomas, was considered the retaliatory weapon of choice during any on-the-road disputes—he once threw it at the band after they “stole his drummer” for a day. Thomas calls the boys “swoothhearts,” none the less. “It was pretty much the best tour any of us have been on.”

Thomas, who has been touring on and off since September, has yet to play a show in South Florida under the name King Tuff; Thomas’ garage-rock, power pop band based in Los Angeles is still enjoying the chart topping performance of their third and most recent album, “Black Moon Spell.”

On Saturday, Jan. 17, King Tuff will take on the Churchill’s stage for the first time.

“It’s going to be full on, buck wild,” said Thomas, while navigating his tour van through the Texas desert en route to South Florida.

The show will feature the Jacuzzi Boys and D.C.-based band Ex Hex, lead by front-woman and songwriting veteran Mary Timony, whose past projects include Wild Flag, Helium and AutoCLAVE.

King Tuff’s South Florida debut is welcomed by many—KT has earned quite the reputation in Miami’s garage and punk rock community.

With three albums under his belt, Thomas has seen King Tuff take off. Shortly after its Wednesday, Sept. 24 release, “Black Moon Spell,” was CMJ’s “most added” album on college radio the week of Sept. 23. Later, it debuted at number one on Billboard Heatseeker’s “Hot Shot Debut” chart the week of Oct. 11. It also took the number one spot on CMJ’s College Radioplay chart for the week of Oct. 14.

“It seems like every record we put out gets a little bit more attention,” Thomas said. “Over the years it’s just been, you know, snowballing—which is nice.”

With bands like King Tuff deciding to visit South Florida, Rob Budowsky, the owner of Strutter USA Productions, says Miami is experiencing its own snowball effect—it’s finally getting the attention it deserves.

Strutter USA, the booking agency that put the King Tuff and Ex Hex show together, was conceived in October of 2013, and since then, has worked to dispel the idea that rock and roll music doesn’t have a place in South Florida.

“I think agents and bands are reluctant to come down here because it’s the first time for a lot of them and they don’t know what to expect,” Budowsky said. Budowsky managed the Jacuzzi Boys’ 2013 California tour where he was introduced to Magic Jake, the bass player for King Tuff. On that same trip, Budowsky spent a few days at Old Gary’s San Francisco home. Old Gary is King Tuff’s drummer.

Budowsky says, despite the city’s reputation, momentum has been building in the city. Future projects for Strutter USA include La Luz and The Shivas, two veteran bands hailing from the Pacific Northwest.

“Every show helps the next show,” Budowsky said. “It’s all a network of friends. When King Tuff and those guys go back to California, and they talk to their friends about what a great time they had in Miami and how well they were taken care of, those bands will start to say, ‘Hey we want to go to Miami. Book us show down there.’”

Budowsky says that local word-of-mouth is what makes his job and the music great.

“These guys that I can call my friends are creating this wonderful music. It’s like another level of fandom when its your friends making the music,” said Budowsky, who declares that King Tuff’s “So Desperate” song to possibly be “the greatest pop song of all time.”
Defensive Coaches Conklin, Harley joining staff at University of Pittsburgh

Sportsf@fiusm.com

After leading the FIU defense to a historically great season in 2014, Defensive Coordinator Josh Conklin has agreed to take the same position at University of Pittsburgh under new Head Coach Pat Narduzzi.

Narduzzi, formerly the defensive coordinator at Michigan State University, is widely regarded as one of the best defensive minds in college football.

The Panthers finished last season No. 4 in the country in takeaways, No. 35 in total defense, and led Conference USA in red zone defense. Head Coach Ron Turner brought Conklin in as the FIU Panthers’ defensive coordinator in 2013, who in turn quickly made FIU one of the premiere defenses in the country.

FIU Linebackers’ coach Rob Harley will be departing the program and joining Conklin’s defensive staff in Pittsburgh as well. Harley also played a key role in FIU’s defensive success last year, taking a young group of linebackers and turning them into successful Division-I football players.

These moves will leave Ron Turner with multiple holes to fill on the defensive coaching staff, and it will be extremely difficult to replicate the performance of Conklin and Harley last season. However, with a roster that has CBI Richard Leonard returning for his final year of eligibility, as well as defensive standouts including LB Davion Collimon and DE Michael Wakefield, whoever takes over the defensive coordinator job will have key returning talent to work with.

The Panthers capped off an eight-game road trip with a 70-53 loss against the University of Birmingham at Alabama. The loss drops the Panthers’ record to 8-9 overall and 1-2 in Conference USA.

The Panthers went into the half with a 31-28 lead, but were unable to hold off scoring runs by the Blazers in the second half. The Blazers went on separate 10-2 and 12-0 runs in the second half. They eventually outscored the Panthers 42-22 in the second half.

The Panthers were led by senior guard Dennis Mavin who had 12 points on 4-of-16 shooting. Mavin was coming off a 31-point performance at Middle Tennessee. Adrian Diaz, the Panthers’ second leading scorer, had only five points on 2-of-2 shooting in his 30 minutes of action. Diaz leads the Panthers in efficiency this season, shooting over 65% from the floor.

The Panthers finished the game shooting 31.7 percent from the field, a percentage with which victories are difficult to come by. FIU fell to UAB with a final score of 68-45. With the loss, FIU’s overall record this season dropped to 3-11 and further extended their losing streak to three games.

Destini Feagin lead the way with 12 points and 8 rebounds and Marita Davydova notched a double-double with 11 points. Davydova also had five points on 2-of-2 shooting in her 30 minutes of action.

Season stand-out Kiandre’a Pound finished the game with 8 points, shooting 4-12 from the field, and 4 steals. On the other hand, guard Taylor Shade finished with 6 points.

The Panthers will travel to Huntington, WV to take on Marshall University in their next C-USA matchup. There they will look to win their first game against a Conference opponent and record their fourth win of the season.

For the third time this season, FIU went head-to-head against a Conference USA opponent. And for the third time this season the Panthers fell to a C-USA opponent by double digits.

On Sunday, Jan. 11, the Panthers hosted the University of Alabama at Birmingham Blazers.

Despite a slow start from both teams, the three pointers eventually began to fall for the Blazers. This sparked a 15-4 run with about twelve minutes left in the first half.

By the end of the half UAB had taken a 29-21 lead, shooting 50 percent from long-range and going 16-29 from the field.

Coming out of the half, the Blazers continued their dominant offensive performance. FIU fought back early on, however, their run was short-lived as UAB pulled ahead to take their largest lead of the game at 25 points with about 6 minutes left in the game.

The Panthers pulled off one last run to cut the Blazer lead to 14 but by then it was too late. Even with this final run, the Panthers finished the game shooting 31.7 percent from the field, a percentage with which victories are difficult to come by.

FIU fell to UAB with a final score of 68-45. With the loss, FIU’s overall record this season dropped to 3-11 and further extended their losing streak to three games.

Panthers look to bounce back from disappointing end

The team has some returning infield starters back from last season in third baseman Josh Anderson, shortstop Julius Gaines and Edwin Rios, who is expected to move from second base to first base as he recovers from a shoulder injury this season. Last season the offense was headlined day in and day out by catcher Aramis Garcia. He was drafted by the San Francisco Giants in the second round. He was behind the plate when he grabbed the coaching staff’s attention when he was developing at the plate. Holland also displays good speed but can be stepped onto the field this season. Coach Thomas likes how Gomez improved his swing and has gotten better in the outfield. Cody has the potential to be a major power threat in the lineup as he displayed that power by hitting many home runs in fall ball. The final spot that is still up in the air is center field. Three players are battling it out for the starting job. They are returning sophomore Kolby Folliis, freshmen Jack Schaaf and Evan Holland. The coaching staff is really impressed with Folliis’ speed as they see him in the leadoff spot. Schaaf runs well and can be a left-handed hitting threat in the lineup. Holland also develops good speed but is still developing at the plate. With a little less than two months to go until opening day, there is still plenty of deciding for the coaching staff to do. It looks like there will be a few younger and new faces stepping onto the field this season. This team displays a lot of depth in many positions as the coaches have noticed due to the amount of position battles there are. Head Coach Thomas looks to change the dynamic outlook for this team as they push to be a top team in Conference USA and go deeper into the playoff tournament due to being eliminated in the first round last season.
Contestants prepare for Mr. and Miss FIU

Beauty pageants are often looked down upon, but for FIU pageant contestants Marcos Garcia and Carolina Bussé, the competition is a life opportunity.

I always tell people I don’t want to just be ordinary, and I don’t want ‘being scared’ to stop me… this is why I have to do it.

Elementary Education Major

Both will participate in this year’s Mr. and Miss FIU Scholarship Pageant of which title-holders receive hundreds of dollars in cash prize. However, participants look forward to becoming well-rounded individuals through pageant process.

“I always tell people I don’t want to just be ordinary, and I don’t want ‘being scared’ to stop me… this is why I have to do it,” said Bussé, a sophomore elementary education major.

Bussé said that the pageant process and support from her sorority family, have helped her to overcome struggles of being a shy and fearful person. Last year, she won the title of Ms. Dance Marathon at the Mr. and Miss Dance Marathon Pageant.

“I was intimidated by the [Miss FIU] competition and I realized [that] in life, you have to give back and represent the University. “[In Mexico], we don’t have these kind of pageants and opportunities,” Garcia said. “It would be great for me if I could represent my university by being [an] image and [a] face of FIU.”

According to Koren Illa, a senior communication arts major and executive director of the Miss FIU Pageant Committee, this year marks the 11th anniversary of Miss FIU, and the first for Mr. FIU. Unlike the men’s division, Miss FIU is an official preliminary for the Florida Scholarship Pageant.

Bussé said that for the first time, Mr. FIU will also have the opportunity to win a scholarship prize whereas in the past, winners only received small prizes and gift baskets.

“We’re awarding the Mr. FIU title-holder with an actual scholarship which, in the past, has never been done before—It’s a huge deal for this year,” Illa said.

To compete in the pageant, competitors must prepare a platform that represents a philanthropic organization or project.

Bussé has chosen to work with FIU student and TEDxFIU speaker, Alexa Chavarry. Bussé said she has wanted to work with Chavarry after hearing about her “The Butterfly Project.”

The project asks those who deal with depression to draw a butterfly on their arm whenever they feel the need to self-harm, name it after a loved one and keep it alive by not cutting.

“Sometimes you can’t do it for yourself, you have to remember there’s other people out there that love you and will not be devastated if something happens to you,” said Bussé.

Andrea Mirabal, a junior biology major and Mr. FIU 2014, said that even if pageant contestants don’t win, they should continue to support their platforms, develop their talents and be informed about social issues.

“It’s more about what you do with the title and what you do!” said Mirabal. “Even if you don’t win Miss [or Mr.] FIU, it’s what you do with the pageant.”

Chavarry. Bussé said she has chosen to work with FIU student and TEDxFIU speaker, Alexa Chavarry. Bussé said she has wanted to work with Chavarry after hearing about her “The Butterfly Project.”

The Mr. and Miss FIU pageant will be held at the Mary Ann Wolff Theater at the Biscayne Bay Campus on Jan. 24. Doors for Mr. FIU open at 1:30 p.m. followed by Miss FIU at 5 p.m. There will be a Mad Haters Ball at 4 p.m. in between both pageant hours.

FIU students enter free with student ID. General admissions for one pageant is $20 while admission for both is $30. Paid admission gives points to viewer’s candidate choice.

LGBTQA family hosts annual welcome reception

As University students are welcomed into the spring semester, they are invited by student clubs and organizations to participate in on-campus activities.

A lot of what we do is geared towards students who are simply seeking for somewhere to go, and feel safe and our event is a place all are welcome at.

For Lesbian Gay Bisexual Transgender Queer Questioning and Allies students, faculty and staff, a welcome reception will be held at the Biscayne Bay Campus Thursday, Jan. 15.

The annual event is hosted by LGBTQA clubs and organizations such as the Gay-Straight Alliance, SAVE Dade, Equality Florida and Pridelines Youth Services, according to Gisela Vega, associate director of the LGBTQA Initiatives in the Office of Multicultural Programs and Services.

All offer opportunities for personal growth, networking, becoming politically involved and engaging in LGBTQA issues.

SAVE Dade, for example, is Miami-Dade County’s leading organization devoted to protecting LGBTQA people against discrimination.

Vega said the reception is also a way for students to network and inquire what different events will run this spring for LGBTQA students.

“The event is basically a social reception, a networker for people to meet one another, to find out about the events… sort of introduce students to different groups that we have that serve the LGBTQA community,” Vega said.

This month, for example, the LGBTQA family will host their 3D Series where students discuss gender identities, gender issues and social rights as LGBTQA individuals.

Edwin Serrano, a graduate assistant for LGBTQA Initiatives, said in a previous interview with Student Media that events like the 3D Series, are where LGBTQA people can find support and comfort.

“A lot of what we do is geared towards students who are simply seeking for somewhere to go, and feel safe and our event is a place all are welcome at,” Serrano said.

“We when [are] planning for this semester’s 3D events, we [want] to cover topics and issues that could reach out to any college student’s experience,” he said.

According to LGBTQA Initiatives, the organization strives to reduce homophobia and heterosexism on both campuses through education, advocacy and awareness.

Over 50 students are expected to participate at the BBC reception from 12 p.m. to 2 p.m. at the Wolfe University Center, Room 157. Free food and refreshments will be provided.
