This poetry collection moves from the narrator's childhood in the marshes of Canada to her coming of age in a new, southern swamp in South Florida. Many of the poems use free verse as well as fairly recent poetic forms like the Golden Shovel and the Pecha Kucha. Others rely on wordplay and nonce forms. Influenced by Hector Veil Temperly, Matthew Zapruder, Dorothea Lasky, Laura Kasischke and Anne Carson, the poems often employ simple language in stream of consciousness, and oscillate between lyric and narrative. These poems are feverish creations inspired by the oracular tradition and induced by the psychic crush of modern life: depression of the body and mind, cultural paranoia, and the decline of nature. The reader is privy not only to the personal biography of the narrator, but also to the inner workings of the narrator's mind as it encounters and interprets the world.

FAQ

I'm my own soccer mom

I've got my fam van

And my mom jeans

I'm my own wife

And my own husband

I'm my own baby

My own bathwater

I'm my own backyard

My own tandem bike

My own maid

My own chef and dietician

I'm my own gardener

My own personal shopper, personal trainer

I'm my own social network

My own meme

My own penpal

My own mistress

My own true love

I'm cooking my own books

I'm fleecing my own millions

I'm robbing myself blind
I'm never lonely in a crowd
I'm my own hero
I'm rescuing myself from the brink
I'm my own death threat
My own heart condition
My own anxiety
I'm my own epiphany
My own moon
And my own island
I've got a bridge
But you can't cross it

I WANTED TO FIND AMERICA

Driving long alone,
this first rest stop after the border like an epiphany. The woman inside sells me another phone card.
She is kind and calls me Hon'.
Road signs look more sure of themselves here,
so I load back into the car, feeling very fast.
It's raining hard in the mountains and my wiper is broken.
My car keeps shaking on the downhills.
I think of dying in a different country.
I pray to god, the one on the money.
It's overcast and I'm driving by a river where men are fishing
up to their knees in freedom.
I want to try that fish. I want to buy a root beer and an Archie Comic.
I want to own a keychain covered in stars.

MIAMI AS LOVER

All through this black moon night

I've been woken by offers of sex and the weeping chorus of balcony dogs.

I ask you to turn on the fan, to lift off the duvet,

but you refuse, telling me the names of your girlfriends and all the books you've read lately.

I put on your shearling coat and empty its pockets.

I pummel you with mitten fists

until you cry out that you invented ironic, before the Internet, you invented it!

I jump on you again.

I'm going to marry an American,

I tell you, but it won't be you.

MY GUY

I cut together my dream guy from Men's Health. It was a challenge because my guy isn't so into body that he'd exist in Men's Health, but I found a picture of a comedian in a flannel shirt, so I scissored that out.

Next, I spotted a basketball player from the 70s wearing Chuck Taylors, and I carved around his feet.

My guy has seven hands:

one carries a mic,

one holds a paperback,

one pulls a navy backpack

because he's a multi-task-master-blaster.

Some hands stretch for me, and some hands hold me.

He has dark eyebrows, soft eyes, and several faces.

One smiles towards the picture of my face.

One stares directly at whoever looks into the collage.

One is looking into the distance over green water.

When I bought the Men's Health
